 The Blue Angels' beach homecoming show this weekend will open with a pre-show fly-over of World War II airplanes that will honor and include veterans of World War II. Julian MacQueen, founder and CEO of Innisfree Hotels, together with Pensacola attorney Roy Kinsey and the Santa Rosa Island Authority have organized a tribute to World War II veterans. MacQueen and Kinsey, both experienced pilots, will join other aviation enthusiasts and their vintage airplanes, which are set to arrive in Pensacola on Thursday, July 10, for the weekend Air Show. Kinsey recruited veterans to fill the seats and enjoy the ride. "These flights should be special for both the veterans and the crowd watching," says Kinsey. He hopes that when spectators see the planes and the veterans, they pause for a moment to appreciate the sacrifices made by veterans and the debt we owe them for protecting the freedoms we enjoy today.

 This is our regular segment where we present a current issue and solicit viewer input of their opinions on that issue. Today's issue was: "Do you believe the U.S. should be more involved in preventing a full scale war in the Middle East?" Israel's leader says the country will exert "great force" against Gaza's Hamas rulers after the Islamic militants rejected a truce agreement. Israel halted its fire for six hours after accepting an Egyptian truce proposal. But with Hamas continuing to launch rockets into Israel, it resumed strikes in the afternoon. The Israeli military says Gaza militants fired close to 125 rockets since the truce was to have begun. An Israeli civilian was killed Tuesday by fire from the Gaza strip, the first Israeli death in more than a week of fighting. The Obama administration today urged Hamas to accept the ceasefire agreement. The President said last night that further escalation would not benefit either side, but reiterated U.S. support for Israel's actions.

* Okaloosa reporter Laura Hussey profiled the Munitions airmen at Hurlburt Field who help keep gunships ready for action. These airmen assemble, load and deliver aircraft artillery rounds for AC-130U gunships. Teamwork is key here. At home, when the mission is training, their camaraderie helps them push through repetitive tasks in grueling summer heat. In places like Kandahar, where the heat and the stakes are even higher, teamwork and trust are vital. There are 34 troops in this unit; the shop runs 24-7. Their business model is "anytime, anyplace."

 Flight students aboard NAS Pensacola got up close and personal with different aircraft they may end up working on or flying in the future. It's part of the 479th Flying Training Group's Career Day. The flight students are trained to work on a variety of aircraft. These career days typically occur four times a year. Each fly-in gives a fresh set of flight students the chance to learn about the aircraft they'll be flying for years to come.
