*24 Rob Brown reported from the Choctawhatchee Aviation Institute and Fort Walton Beach High School on how local school districts would handle a school shut-down situation similar to the one in Los Angeles in wake of the San Bernardino terrorist shooting. The popular answer was that there are plans in place, but that those plans are constantly changing. Unfortunately, the need for a plan is a reality for students in 2015. And local school district leaders say events like San Bernardino and Los Angeles help them evolve plans to keep students safe. The Escambia, Santa Rosa, and Okaloosa County School Districts didn't want to give too much information, to maintain a tactical advantage in case of terrorist or multiple shooter situations. The Okaloosa School District said that for parents to get the most up to date information in case of worst case scenarios, it's critical that they keep their most up to date contact information on file with their kids' schools. We also talked with some parents who say they are creating plans at home to handle such a situation. Parent Cayce Collins says she doesn't want her kids to be afraid of the real world, but she does want them to know what to do in a worst case scenario.
