2016 race turns to New Hampshire; Clinton, Sanders debate "progressive" values; Cruz, Trump, Rubio lead Republican field: Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders met in their first one-on-one debate where they clashed over Wall Street, foreign policy and what it means to be a progressive. Days before the New Hampshire primary, Sanders leads Clinton by 20 points in the Granite State. On the Republican side, Donald Trump's second-place finish in Iowa has shaken up the race for the GOP nomination. And third-place finisher Marco Rubio is under attack by other "establishment" candidates including Jeb Bush and Chris Christie. We get a report on the state of the race from The Washington Post's Robert Costa and AP's Lisa Lerer in New Hampshire and LA Times' Doyle McManus and Morning Consult's Reid Wilson in Washington.

After a double-digit loss in New Hampshire, the former secretary of state is aiming to blunt Sanders' momentum and stake claim to the first southern state primary in South Carolina on February 27. On the Republican side, polls show Donald Trump continues to dominate the narrowing GOP field after a decisive victory in New Hampshire. Ohio Gov. John Kasich's come-from-behind second place finish in the Granite State has scrambled the race for the Republican nomination.

South Dakota considers legislating transgender access to restrooms: South Dakota would become the first state to restrict transgender students' access to restrooms if Gov. Dennis Daugaard signs a controversial bill passed by the state Congress. The bill would require transgender students in public schools use only restrooms that match their gender at birth; LGBT activists have called on Daugaard to veto the law. April Brown of the American Graduate team reports.

The Fight to Replace Antonin Scalia at the Supreme Court and The Donald vs. The Pope: The sudden death of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia threw the government and the 2016 campaign trail into an uproar this week. Senate Republicans immediately vowed to block any nomination put forward by President Obama to succeed the conservative justice. Republicans hoping to succeed the president are hoping to turn November's election into a referendum on the Court. Meanwhile, Republican frontrunner Donald Trump got into a war of word with Pope Francis who said Trump is "not Christian" for his views on immigration and the border. Trump called the pontiff's comments "disgraceful." And the Democratic candidates courted African American and Latino voters as the 2016 fight moves to Nevada and South Carolina.

Donald Trump racked up seven wins on Super Tuesday and holds a 100 delegate lead over Ted Cruz which has establishment Republicans worried about his frontrunner status. Joined by 2008 Republican nominee Mitt Romney, Cruz and Marco Rubio have launched sustained attacks of Trump's conservative credentials and record. At times, the Republican race took a decidedly personal -- and anatomical -- turn. We get a GOP status report from The Washington Post's Dan Balz, The New York Times' Jonathan Martin and The Atlantic's Molly Ball.

Republican Race Turns Civil Ahead of Florida and Ohio, The "Two Trumps" and Sanders Upsets Clinton in Michigan: Republicans debated in Florida ahead of the state's winner-take-all primary next week. Debates have become raucous events for the GOP, but the policy-focused debate led Republican frontrunner Donald Trump to call the debate "civil." With over 300 delegates at stake on Tuesday, Florida Sen. Marco Rubio and Ohio Gov. John Kasich face crucial home state tests of their viability. Trump, who rolled out the endorsement of former candidate Ben Carson on Friday, answered questions about his public and private persona. In the Democratic race, Bernie Sanders is hoping to maintain momentum after an upset victory over Hillary Clinton in Michigan on Tuesday. We look at the critical delegate math on both sides.

Are the best days of the U.S. economy over? If you add up all of the innovations made from the late 1800s up to 1970, there's been no comparable stretch of economic growth, before or since, says economist Robert Gordon. According to his new book, "The Rise and Fall of American Growth," slower progress is just the new normal. But in our current computer age, not everyone buys that idea. Economics correspondent Paul Solman reports.

Teaching Children about Religion: The US is one of the most religiously diverse nations in history, and many experts believe it is important that children learn about world religions, even at an early age. But there are not many public forums where they can learn about faith traditions other than their own. Correspondent Kim Lawton visited the Children's Museum of Indianapolis, which for the last several months has featured a National Geographic exhibition called Sacred Journeys. Lawton speaks with teachers, advisors, and scholars, including Professor Raymond Williams of Wabash College, who explains why education about religion is so necessary: "You cannot build a democracy on fear and hatred. It has to be built on knowledge and hope."

Why activists are fighting over feral felines: With an estimated 80 million feral cats in communities across the United States, there is growing a controversy on how to deal with them. Euthanizing cats has been the traditional approach, but many animal rights activists believe that approach is cruel and inhumane. Adithya Sambamurthy of Reveal for the Center for Investigative Reporting has the story.

Vestiges of an ancient Greek art form, preserved by catastrophe: Fewer than 200 bronze sculptures from the Hellenistic era -- a period that began more than 2,000 years ago -- survive today. About a quarter of those are gathered in an exhibit at the National Gallery of Art called "Power and Pathos," which offers a view into the spread of ancient Greek culture around the world, and the rise of a new art form. Jeffrey Brown reports.

In the frigid valleys of Japan's Shiga Highlands, a troop of snow monkeys functions in a complex society of rank and privilege where each knows his and her place. Their leader is still new to the job and something of a solitary grouch. One innocent little monkey, unaware of his own low status, reaches out to this lonely leader and they form a rare and remarkable bond that alters both their lives. Changing seasons bring new babies, family disagreements and tragedies. Mating season brings competition for females as the days grow shorter and colder in the rush to winter. With their now confident leader to guide them and their families to shelter and care for them, these snow monkeys are ready to face the world.

Executive Action on Guns, North Korean Nuclear Threat and Countdown to Iowa & NH: During a speech in front of families of gun violence victims, President Obama announced new executive actions to curb gun violence including expanding background checks and mental health screenings. But Congressional leaders and the NRA expressed their disapproval at the president's attempts to bypass Congress. Real Clear Politics' Alexis Simendinger explains the debate. Meanwhile, North Korea claimed this week to have successfully tested a hydrogen bomb. While U.S. leaders question the claims, The New York Times' David Sanger explains the global condemnation. And on the 2016 campaign trail, Republican frontrunner Donald Trump is questioning his GOP rival Ted Cruz's eligibility to run because he was born in Canada. On the Democratic side, former President Bill Clinton hits the campaign trail for his wife Hillary Clinton. With less than a month until the Iowa caucus, TIME's Michael Scherer and The Atlantic's Molly Ball report on the state of the race.

Political Storm with One Week to Iowa, Supreme Court to Weigh Immigration Plan and Iran Releases U.S. Prisoners: With one week until the Iowa caucuses, polls show outsider candidates Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders are gaining momentum. Trump, who is fighting off a conservative challenge from Ted Cruz, gained the endorsement of 2008 GOP VP nominee Sarah Palin. While in the Democratic race, Sanders' surge in polling has Hillary Clinton's campaign questioning his electability. At the Supreme Court, the justices have agreed to hear a challenge to President Obama's executive actions on immigration that halted the deportation of millions of undocumented immigrants. Also this week, Iran released several American prisoners who had been held for years, including a Washington Post reporter held for more than 500 days, during a prisoner swap with the United States.

Whitney M. Young, Jr. was one of the most celebrated - and controversial - leaders of the civil rights era. The Powerbroker follows his journey from segregated Kentucky to head of the National Urban League. Unique among black leaders, he took the fight directly to the powerful white elite, gaining allies in business and government, including three presidents. Young had the difficult tasks of calming the fears of white allies, relieving the doubts of fellow civil rights leaders, and responding to attacks from the militant Black Power movement.

Can Egyptian women start a revolution against sexual violence? In Tahrir Square, the center of the Egyptian revolution five years ago, women safely joined men to protest for a new future. But that moment soon ended; hundreds, even thousands of female protestors were sexually assaulted. In some cases, activists believe the government used violence as a political weapon. Special correspondent Nick Schifrin examines how women have fought back through activism.

Russian airstrikes continue despite fragile Syrian cease-fire agreement: Seventeen nations led by the U.S. and Russia offered a Syrian cease-fire agreement in Munich Friday, to be enacted in one week. But Russian airstrikes in the region have continued unabated, President Bashar al-Assad is still vowing to retake all of Syria, and rebel groups, who were not part of negotiations, may be reluctant to comply. Chief foreign affairs correspondent Margaret Warner reports.

The Pope Meets the Patriarch: This week (February 12) brought an historic moment in the more than one-thousand-year-old divide between Eastern and Western Christianity. On his way to Mexico for a five-day visit, Pope Francis stopped in Cuba, where he met with the leader of the Russian Orthodox Church, Patriarch Kirill. It was the first official meeting between a pope and a Russian Orthodox patriarch since the Great Schism on 1054. Watch our conversation taped in advance of the meeting with managing editor Kim Lawton and host Bob Abernethy.

As Pentagon overhauls nuclear triad, critics advise caution. The Pentagon is preparing for an extensive -- and expensive -- modernization of the country's half-century-old land, air, and sea-based nuclear weapons. Supporters contend a fully-equipped nuclear triad is essential for national defense and deterrence, but critics say it's time to reexamine the extent of our arsenal in a post-Cold War world. Special correspondent Jamie McIntyre reports.

The Fight to Replace Antonin Scalia at the Supreme Court and The Donald vs. The Pope: The sudden death of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia threw the government and the 2016 campaign trail into an uproar this week. Senate Republicans immediately vowed to block any nomination put forward by President Obama to succeed the conservative justice. Republicans hoping to succeed the president are hoping to turn November's election into a referendum on the Court. Meanwhile, Republican frontrunner Donald Trump got into a war of word with Pope Francis who said Trump is "not Christian" for his views on immigration and the border. Trump called the pontiff's comments "disgraceful." And the Democratic candidates courted African American and Latino voters as the 2016 fight moves to Nevada and South Carolina.

Donald Trump racked up seven wins on Super Tuesday and holds a 100 delegate lead over Ted Cruz which has establishment Republicans worried about his frontrunner status. Joined by 2008 Republican nominee Mitt Romney, Cruz and Marco Rubio have launched sustained attacks of Trump's conservative credentials and record. At times, the Republican race took a decidedly personal -- and anatomical -- turn. We get a GOP status report from The Washington Post's Dan Balz, The New York Times' Jonathan Martin and The Atlantic's Molly Ball.

Republican Race Turns Civil Ahead of Florida and Ohio, The "Two Trumps" and Sanders Upsets Clinton in Michigan: Republicans debated in Florida ahead of the state's winner-take-all primary next week. Debates have become raucous events for the GOP, but the policy-focused debate led Republican frontrunner Donald Trump to call the debate "civil." With over 300 delegates at stake on Tuesday, Florida Sen. Marco Rubio and Ohio Gov. John Kasich face crucial home state tests of their viability. Trump, who rolled out the endorsement of former candidate Ben Carson on Friday, answered questions about his public and private persona. In the Democratic race, Bernie Sanders is hoping to maintain momentum after an upset victory over Hillary Clinton in Michigan on Tuesday. We look at the critical delegate math on both sides.

Supreme Court Contraception Mandate: This week, the US Supreme Court heard oral arguments about a provision in the Affordable Care Act that requires employers to cover contraception services for their employees. After protests from some in the religious community, the government agreed to allow faith-based nonprofits with religious objections to opt out if they filled out a form. But a coalition of faith groups, including an order of Catholic nuns called Little Sisters of the Poor, says the law still violates their religious freedom. Other faith-based groups support the mandate as a matter of justice, saying all employees should have access to contraception. Tim O'Brien reports on the issues at stake.

Should the NCAA pay college athletes? March Madness means a huge payday for coaches, colleges, networks and advertisers -- everyone except the athletes themselves. Although television rights for the NCAA tournament this year alone brought in nearly a billion dollars, the players won't see a penny, and many are unhappy with the situation. Economics correspondent Paul Solman examines the cases for and against paying student athletes.
