That's more than 8 million dollars less than what the court asked for last year. The court wasn't to grant a 21 hundred dollar raises to employees and has factored in the possible creation of an intermediate court of appeals. Governor Jim Justice mentioned the intermediate court in his State of the State address and legislative leaders have spoken in favor of the idea. The court's finances have come under great scrutiny, starting with our I Team reports, but Walker says she is ready and willing to work with the legislature.

A third reading is in store for tomorrow with over a dozen amendments waiting for debate -- but the heart of the campus carry bill remains intact – enabling students and faculty to carry guns on campus. Some of the amendments would ban guns from large athletic venues and school daycares. Of course, we will follow the bill's progress tomorrow.
LEGISLATURE Our viewers have expressed concern about the WV Legislature. We report on news from the Capitol and laws being passed in our area to provide viewers with up to date information.	Regularly scheduled newscasts	3/12/2019	7am-8am  10pm – 11pm	Story runs 31 seconds	Several justices were impeached in August after our I-Team investigation into lavish office renovations that evolved into accusations of corruption, incompetence and neglect of duty. Back in October a temporary state supreme court stopped those proceedings -- ruling that the impeachments violated the separation-of-powers doctrine and that the legislature lacked jurisdiction to pursue trials. The legislature's petition argues that the panel inappropriately expanded the state judiciary's authority in violation of the legislature's primary role over impeachment.
