Living in your car. Have you ever considered it? It seems to be a growing population for those who find themselves without housing they can afford. Sometimes it's a transition in life, and sometimes it's a last resort. Using that as a backdrop, a growing ministry for some churches is 'Safe Parking Zones.' Places where a man, woman or even a whole family can park and sleep overnight for free without worry.
Food Insecurity	KLOVE's Positive People News Podcast with on-air 60sec promo for podcast	July 1 – July 9	4 per wk	60sec Podcast 1.32min	K-LOVE's Positive People: High School Students Start Food Truck For Hungry Students When student leadership in this Kentucky school district realized there were hundreds of hungry and homeless kids right on their own campus, several young student senators came up with an innovative way to help. The idea for a food truck was born. A special thanks to WOWK-TV for this story. More than 300 young people with the Ashland Independent School District don't have a permanent address, and even more rely on free or reduced cost breakfasts and lunches. While these young people can eat during the week thanks to various programs, the Ashland Student Senate noticed an untouched gap—the weekends and school breaks. Gavin Coutour and Cassie Stevens, two members of the student senate, came up with the idea of renovating the district's existing box truck to bring food directly to hungry students on days when school is not in session.
Youth Issues	KLOVE's Positive People News Podcast with on-air 60sec promo for podcast	July 1 – July 6	4 per wk	60 sec Podcast 14.56min	K-LOVE's Positive People: Cookie Company Making A Difference by Monika Kelly. It's been a little more a year since Kelli Ridenour decided to turn her successful for-profit cookie business into a non-profit called Kelli's Cookies, For Goodness Bakes. Her inspiration? Kelli wanted to make a difference in the lives of foster youth who often end up homeless or addicted after "aging-out" of the foster care system at age 18. She also wanted to help at-risk youth in the Placer and Sacramento County regions of Northern California. Kelli says her mission at For Goodness Bakes goes beyond just training young people how to bake and sell cookies. She truly wants to see vulnerable youth—both "aged-out" foster kids as well as "at-risk"—become successful in all areas of their lives.

Just about every study done on the topic shows newborns need human touch. Those babies that end up in the NICU (Neonatal Intensive Care Unit) tend to have less physical contact than others. Several hospitals across the country have developed a program that allows volunteers to hold those infants. Many call them cuddle buddies or NICU Cuddlers. Registered Nurse Kellie Rumble at Eskenazi Health in Indianapolis says there are benefits of human contact with those babies. "We quickly found out just the human touch and holding the babies and rocking the babies, that helps them with their oxygen levels and helps them bump up on their feedings and get feeding ready, and helps with brain development, and lowers anxiety pain."

Kristin Schell, an Austin mom, was frustrated. She was frustrated with not being present, with having a hectic life and with not knowing her neighbors. A summer as a foreign exchange student in France had exposed her to the wonder of long, boisterous nightly dinner parties filled laughter and love. Kristin says it was during that summer that God inspired her life-long love of hospitality. When a delivery man left a heavy picnic table in her Texas front yard, Kristin says she had an “ah-ha” moment. What if she left the table right where it was, painted it turquoise and built community with her neighbors, one connection at a time? Kristin says within several minutes of sitting outside on her new table, a neighbor who had lived down the street for 20 years stopped by just to say hi. The two had never crossed paths, even though Kristin and her husband had lived on the same street for the past decade! Since then, the turquoise table has served as a beacon of hospitality— neighbors have gathered for impromptu supper parties, Operation Christmas Child packing parties, and quick cups of coffee. Jesus reminds us to “love your neighbor” and Kristin has seen this play out in a variety of ways over the past 5 years. In one instance, she was able to care for her neighbor’s dog and notify her children that her mom had to be taken to the hospital. Kristin believes this is what God has called her to do. Kristin has since written The Turquoise Table: Finding Community and Connection in Your Own FrontYard. What started out as a simple idea has turned global, with turquoise picnic tables all over the country and even internationally. For more information about how you can love your own neighbors, visit Kristin’s website at http://www.kristinschell.com/the-turquoise-table/.

He was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, but never finished high school. He ended up selling drugs, became a drug addict for many years, in and out of jail, in hospitals for stab wounds and he overdosed several times trying to take his own life. God intervened. Barry was pastoring a church in Louisville. There was a group of men who were never going to go to college, but that didn't mean they didn't have talents and gifts. He made them a promise. He told them, "I'm gonna open a restaurant and will teach you guys how to run it. And I said if we do this well, one day you'll be millionaires." A couple of those men are still with him. Barry fought with God after he was led to close his church. He didn't feel like he was pastoring. Someone on the Barry's Cheesesteaks and More Facebook page reminded him, "You're pastoring more people now than you ever have." That's a result of using the Facebook page to offer daily devotionals.

I needed something to do besides kill myself or go back to drinking, and I thought about how our military has always been out there protecting freedom of those like me, who took it for granted. I have seven uncles that served--one lost on Okinawa June 17, 1945. I decided to support our military." At first, Ed started to put together care packages for servicemen and women, carefully including a scripture verse with each box of goodies. He soon realized that God had additional plans for Ed. "From that first care pack to the 25- year-old US Marine that I met recently; God has placed me in the right place at the right time on many occasions. I love the families of the '22' (Ed's referring to the average of 22 veterans who commit suicide every day).

The pups are being trained at Wimberley High to become diabetic alert dogs. Tiffany Black is the agriculture science teacher. Black says, "Three of my students are partnered with three puppies. So, it's their responsibility to care for the puppies. They get to take them home. They're responsible for that basic training and socialization. And then they bring those puppies to school and we work with them in our classrooms, continuing those basic techniques." The students take the dogs home, to school and anywhere else they go to expose them to many different situations. Training service dogs is fun but also comes with giant responsibilities. Health experts have major concerns about the foods we eat. Wrong foods and ingredients are a major cause of obesity and related debilitating problems like heart disease, diabetes, and cancer. Wanting to make a difference and disrupt the status quo in the food industry is Mike Teel. And he has a powerful platform as the owner of Raley's, a grocery chain with more than a hundred stores in western states. One of the first areas of concern Teel tackled: too much sugar. He instructed his stores to place sugar-laden cereals on the bottom shelf, a place Teel describes as, "the death zone in the grocery industry." At shelf eye-level, Teel's stores are featuring more-wholesome, less-sugary cereals. Teel says they're seeing favorable results, adding, "If a customer still wants to buy that product, they still can. We're not trying to force them to make a decision. We're just making it a little more difficult. And we'll do that in other categories in the store in the future." Before taking action on cereals, Raley's had already eliminated soda pop and kid-magnet candies from the check-out lines. To help customers with food content awareness, shelf guides have appeared in aisles of stores, with color codes explaining terms like minimally processed, gluten free, no sugar added, and matching the icons to products.

Working together to meet a basic need for kids can change your perspective. Members of Trace Creek Baptist Church in Kentucky have learned that firsthand by building and delivering bunk beds for families with no safe beds for their kids to sleep in. The team from Trace Creek has joined forces with the organization Sleep in Heavenly Peace and according to everyone involved, no special skills are needed to jump in and help build a bed. Nathan Rogers, the church's Minister to Students, says anyone can play a part in the assembly-line process that includes cutting the wood pieces, sanding, marking and drilling the holes for the hardware, dipping them into the natural kid-proof stain and stamping the headboard of each one with the SHP logo. There are so many great charities that provide clothing, meals, and toys to families in need. Sleep In Heavenly Peace targets a very specific and basic need of the kids in these families - giving them safe and suitable beds to sleep in at night. One family of kids was kept out of foster care and allowed to stay with their grandmother when SHP was able to immediately deliver beds for the kids to sleep in at her home. Want to get involved? You can take part by getting your church group or other organization involved or you can check for an open build in your area where anyone can jump in and help.
