Food Assistance in New Mexico	Report from Santa Fe	4/10/2023	9:30AM	0:27:31	Jill Dixon, Deputy Director of the Food Depot in Santa Fe, the only food bank for nine counties in Northern New Mexico, a total area of 26,000 square miles. The many food distribution programs available to people in need are outlined in Dixon's interview. She also urges people to “donate, advocate, and volunteer” to provide help and food for hungry New Mexicans. At present, the nation is experiencing a “hunger cliff,” a food crisis for the country and certainly for poor states, such as New Mexico. There are two current events making the "hunger cliff" problem worse: The reduction in SNAP benefits (Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, formerly known as Food Stamps) boosted during the pandemic and now dramatically reduced. Secondly, exacerbating this benefits reduction is ongoing inflation and the impact on the costs of food and transportation. The Food Depot has a clear and simple vision: healthy, hunger-free communities in northern New Mexico. They work toward that vision by engaging a network of partners to develop solutions to create a hunger-free New Mexico. The remote little villages and frontier communities that are sprinkled all throughout Northern New Mexico are rich with culture, history, and family, but not always affluent and not always able to make ends meet. The Food Depot is charged with the service of those communities, making sure that there is enough food for everyone. Across those nine NM counties, the Food Depot has over 70 nonprofit partners in hunger relief, and distributes food at a total of 150 locations across that service area. Sherry Hooper, the Food Depot's executive director, has pointed out, “We fed hundreds of thousands of people, but we are not solving the problem of hunger.” She references this Desmond Tutu quote where he says, “We need to stop just pulling people from the river, we need to go upstream and see why they are falling in.” This in-depth interview with Jill Dixon reveals that the Food Depot is definitely going upstream to seek solutions to these critical problems.

Climate Change	Report from Santa Fe	5/1/2023		0:27:53	Devi Lockwood discussing her new book "1,001 Voices on Climate Change: Everyday Stories of Flood, Fire, Drought and Displacement from Around the World." She describes taking 5 years to bicycle through 20 countries, on 6 continents, wearing a sign saying: "Talk to me about climate change." Since her mode of transportation was a bicycle, she traveled on the small local roads that the ordinary people of each country used and so, many people approached her to tell their stories about how climate change has affected their lives, especially in terms of the availability of water. Tuvalu, Afghanistan, New Zealand, and the South Pacific are among the global points she writes about. Lockwood points out that the language we use to talk about climate change is often very abstract and inaccessible, but that there are these human voices being impacted right now. She stresses. "I would encourage people to go out and listen in their communities, to try to understand what those impacts are that are happening right here, right now in New Mexico."

Nuclear Waste Disposal	Report from Santa Fe	6/26/2023	9:30AM	0:28:24	Senator Jeff Steinborn, D -Dona Ana, vice-chair of the Radioactive and Hazardous Materials Committee, discussing "consent-based siting" for nuclear waste disposal and other "hot" topics. Senator Steinborn has been on the cutting edge of efforts to protect New Mexico from becoming a repository for the disposal of high level nuclear waste. During the most recent legislative session he passed a bill, SB 53, that prohibited certain radioactive wastes from being stored in New Mexico. The safe disposal of nuclear waste has long been a drawback to the expansion of nuclear energy. Radioactive nuclear waste has an extremely long half-life, with some scientists saying, "This waste will remain lethal longer than the 300,000 years man has walked on earth." The problem with nuclear energy is that it creates nuclear waste and until now, there has been nowhere to dispose of that waste. A possible solution is "Consent-based Siting," where communities who don't want the waste can send it away, while those that are willing to house it have an economic incentive to do so, and can be compensated for having it near them. This is consent-based siting, with some communities having been given up to several million dollars. Last year, Senator Steinborn also passed a bill for the state of NM to clean up the many abandoned uranium mine sites in NM, which are still radioactive, unmarked, and mostly on Native American land.
