When: July 12th. 2020 (Saturday 11:00 pm / Sunday 6:00 pm) Length: 9'49"

Description of program

Mexican President López Obrador during his campaign sold himself as the one who would end Donald Trump's anti-immigrant policies, and who would not give in to his bravado and intimidation. This week he was face to face with Trump despite the fact that

The Hispanic caucus in Congress officially asked Trump not to meet with the Mexican president who, by the way, according to the latest survey, has 58 percent disapproval. Adriano Espaillat, federal congressman for New York, talks about it.

Description of program

Both in Mexico and outside Aztec territory, there are those who are for and against how the President of Mexico has led the country in the almost 19 months of his government.

In the capital of the country there were also demonstrations of welcome but also of rejection. Edwin Pitti correspondent in d.c. reports.

On Wednesday, July 8, Mexicans in the United States and Mexico listened incredulously to the mutual praise between the presidents of their respective countries. AMLO said Trump has treated Mexico with "respect" and he thanked him for his work in controlling immigration. Duncan Wood who is the director of the Mexico Institute of the Wilson Center thinks about it.

Description of program

The good thing about the trade agreement between the three countries, according to the Mexican president, is that the goods will contain something made in Canada, Mexico and the United States and the other fundamental element is that better wages and better working conditions are guaranteed for workers. However, the reality is brutal because the minimum wage in the United States is an average of 7 dollars and 25 cents per hour, but in Mexico it is 4 dollars NOT per hour but per day !!! Robert López, a financial expert, does the analysis.

Description of program

With the elections coming up soon, many are wondering how important really the Latino vote is - especially now that many are remembering the promises given by Obama and Biden during their administration regarding the immigration reform. Also hundreds of thousands of TPS recipients are in the limbo after the announcement of a possible termination of the program. Are Latinos feeling inclined to give their support to Trump these coming elections? We invited Nathalie Rayes - President of Latino Victory to discuss this subject.

Also, many feel that Biden being president will mean Kamala Harris, his VP, will be the one with the power to rule the country. We discuss her recent speeches and what they mean for the upcoming elections. As the BLM movement continues, the protests are being criticized when it comes to violent acts and both parties blame one another for this. The western fires and their origin, continues to be politicized leaving many wondering if there is a solution for hundreds of families whose homes and lives are being impacted. Finally, the Presidential debate is coming up and within the pandemic and the changes we face, many wonder how the crisis will play a role in the next administration for the next four years. We invited Adolfo Franco, Political Analyst from the Republican Party.

Description of program

Political war broke out this week with the nomination for the vacant Supreme Court seat left by the passing of Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg. Ginsburg before dying asked not to be replaced before the elections. Democrats immediately launched their threats demanding that the person who wins the election be the one who nominates Ginsburg's replacement to the supreme court.

The issues that come to the supreme court are of great importance and impact you directly. The right to abortion, minority rights, homosexual marriage, racial discrimination, validity of the death penalty or possession of firearms - among others.

We are joined by Congressman Jesús Chuy García, Democrat from IL, to talk about the issue - Congressman, thank you for being with us today.

This is the profile of a woman who, without any experience in labor negotiation, faced powerful ranchers and corporations, organized movements that achieved the first labor contracts for farm workers, a story that will undoubtedly show her how the beginnings of these types of battles and also represents a source of inspiration in times of need and oppression. As you have already heard about 30 thousand times, the vote is important but in what way and why is it really vital for the elections and the result on who represents us? One vote could make the difference between the political leader who represents you. Now what about vote-by-mail and what we've heard about the possibility of fraud? We also held a townhall among colleagues from Univisión to discuss the importance of voting in these elections. Not only are we now the largest minority in the country, but those of us who vote are not yet close to the number of those who are eligible to move the scales and play the role we deserve in each election.

Description of program

This week the aid of 600 dollars per week in unemployment expired but the Senate and the White House agreed for another billionaire stimulus at the time that 150 thousand human beings have died of Covid-19 in the country and the infected number exceeds the four and a half million. Given this, a survey indicates that 80% of companies in the country plan to maintain telework after the pandemic, those who responded believe that the pandemic has already changed the way we work and live forever. 6 months after the arrival of the covid-19 in North America we have new challenges as explained by the businesswoman Liliana Gil Valetta, expert in research and market strategies.

The Latino community is a victim of this pandemic not only economically but also clinically and socially. A study by the Milken Institute School of Public Health at George Washington University found that Factors linked to so-called "structural racism," such as crowded housing and risky jobs, put Latinos more at risk for Covid-19 infection. We interviewed the study's lead author Dr. Carlos Rodríguez-Díaz, professor of prevention and community health at the University of Washington.
