The battle for the US House has taken a back seat to the political fireworks in the 2016 Presidential and Montana Governor's race. But with Montana's lone voice in the House on the line, U.S. Representative Ryan Zinke and MT Superintendent of Public Instruction Denise Juneau are running aggressive campaigns. MontanaPBS profiles their strengths, their political positions and their criticisms of each other in this half-hour documentary. How close do they hew to their party's lines? How will they vote if Montanans elect them?
Politics/Election Coverage	The Rundown with Beth Saboe "Montana's Next Governor"	10/6/2016 10/9/2016 10/11/2016 10/12/2016 10/21/2016 10/29/2016 11/3/2016 11/6/2016 11/7/2016	7pm 10:30am 5am 1am 7:30pm 5pm 7:30pm 10:30am 8pm	28min.	News and public affairs producer, Beth Saboe, hosts this series providing in-depth coverage of issues that matter to Montanans. Going beyond the headlines, Saboe explores a wide range of topics including politics, social and legal trends, business and the environment. In this episode the 2016 race to hold the state's top office is pitting Democratic incumbent Gov. Steve Bullock against Republican challenger Greg Gianforte. The Rundown goes beyond the stump speeches to find out where the candidates really stand on issues like refugees, guns, infrastructure and gay rights in a race that is shaping up to be the most expensive gubernatorial contest in the state's history. For months, the two have sparred over many issues including public access to public lands, the state's economy, and Second Amendment rights. While Bullock touts his record on job creation and keeping Montana's budget balanced with a surplus fund, Gianforte calls himself a "political outsider" who is not afraid to stand up to federal overreach. Will Montanans give Bullock another four years in Helena, or will they vote in a Bozeman businessman making his first bid for political office?
