In this episode Richard Browning from the Montana Department of Revenue will help us understand how agricultural land is appraised, and will address questions and concerns about tax appraisals.
Economy, Jobs and Coal in Montana	The Rundown with Beth Saboe "The Future of Colstrip"	7/7/2016 7/10/2016 9/1/2016 9/4/2016	7pm 10am 7:30pm 10:30am	30min.	News and public affairs producer, Beth Saboe, hosts this series providing in-depth coverage of issues that matter to Montanans. Going beyond the headlines, Saboe explores a wide range of topics including politics, social and legal trends, business and the environment. At a time when the coal industry is facing one setback after another, Saboe explores how the conflict over coal is playing out in the small town of Colstrip. This company town is home to around 2,200 people, and the coal-fired power plant and nearby coal mine are the community's largest employers. But Colstrip's plant is primarily owned by out-of-state utility companies who want to wean customers off electricity generated by coal and replace it with renewable energy. The Obama administration is also making it hard for this town that coal built, with a plan to fight climate change that would force Montana to drastically reduce its carbon emissions. Can the people of Colstrip win the war on coal? Or will this small town be forced to forgo its namesake to survive?
