90.3 WCPN® ideastream<sup>sm</sup> PROGRAM LIST

for the period

October 1 to December 31, 2013

The list below represents the current issues of community importance to which ideastream's news, public affairs and general programming staffs addressed their attention during the designated reporting period noted above. The list has been compiled by the ideastream<sup>sm</sup> Content Department, under my direction and supervision.

The subjects are a consequence of current news as it developed in Northeast Ohio during the reporting period and the staff's newsgathering and outreach which included contact with officials in the region, community leaders, business leaders, healthcare representatives, other news media and a diverse mix of private citizens among others.

The Content staff regularly follow news of local issues or impact as presented by other news organizations, consult informally with colleagues in the media, and routinely read a wide variety of daily and weekly news publications from area communities, including The Plain Dealer, The Beacon Journal, and occasional additional neighborhood publications; minority news and special interest publications such as the Scene and The Call and Post; area weekly and monthly news publications, including Crain's Cleveland Business, Cleveland Magazine; and online news sources such as www.CoolCleveland.com and blogs such as www.brewedfreshdaily.com, as well as national news and special interest publications such as The New York Times, and The Wall Street Journal in order to stay aware of issues and events inside and outside of our region and to gain various perspectives on what is newsworthy.

The staff accesses the daily Ohio Public Radio Statehouse News Bureau (Columbus) audio feeds. Local, state, regional, national and international news from Associated Press is also part of the daily diet of the Content staff, as are other regularly-produced independent productions.

The ideastream<sup>sm</sup> Content staff also regularly reaches out to community civic groups and agencies for research and/or scholarly data to provide supplementary background material to assist in understanding local issues. The College of Urban Affairs at Cleveland State University, the Center for Regional Economic Issues at Case Western Reserve University, the Citizens League of Greater Cleveland, the League of Women Voters are examples of academic agencies or organizations whose written and programmatic materials have been particularly instrumental in helping us address community issues.

In addition, ideastream's ongoing utilization and broadcasting of cross-cultural and international-content materials is a valuable means to stay abreast of concerns and issues of immediate interest to the people of the many cultural heritages represented in the Greater Cleveland area.

The attached list represents the current issues of community importance to which ideastream's news and public affairs and general programming staffs have addressed their attention for the above-designated reporting period.

The programming listed was broadcast, in response to these issues, and after consultation with the ideastream Community Advisory Board, which provided specific recommendations about stories and issues to be considered.

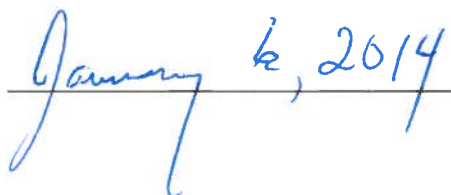

In addition, the list and programming were developed with the advice and assistance of the staff of the ideastream news and public affairs staff, drawing on their extensive and on-going contacts with area officials, community leaders and private citizens representing the broad spectrum of endeavors and interest in Northeast Ohio.

The attached program descriptions represent materials that were locally produced and broadcast in WCPN's morning, afternoon and evening news, and as specials; plus materials that were obtained from a variety of other sources specifically for broadcast in conjunction with WCPN's presentation of programming related to community issues.

Major Guests:

Dr. Sidney Smith, director of the Center for Cardiovascular Science and Medicine at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Steven Nissen, chair of cardiovascular medicine, Cleveland Clinic
Dr. Shyam Bhakta, cardiologist, Akron General Health System

Points:

New national heart health guidelines may give pause to some Northeast Ohioans making preparations for a sumptuous Thanksgiving feast. The American College of Cardiology in association with the American Heart Association recently released new recommendations that would dramatically boost the number of people who take cholesterol-reducing statin drugs. Noted Cleveland Clinic cardiologist Steven Nissen calls it a “tectonic shift” in heart care, and that shift has produced an earthquake in the medical community. While some praise the guidelines as long overdue, others claim they are too severe. We’ll spend this hour, looking at the larger issue of heart health, the difference between good cholesterol and bad, what statins actually do, and who should take them. Join us with your questions and your thoughts on maintaining a healthy heart.

Major Guests:

N/A

Points:

New England Public Radio presents, "An Audacious Act: How a High School Dropout Helped Educate America." This hour-long documentary looks at 19th century Congressional legislation -- The Morrill Act -- that established many of the country's public universities and colleges or "land-grant" schools. The program is written, produced and hosted by veteran journalist, Lisa Mullins. The Morrill Act, signed into law by President Abraham Lincoln in 1862, has since helped educate more than 25 million students. It was passed during a tumultuous time in U.S. history, even before the cannons of the Civil War went silent. It's a fascinating story, winding its way through 20th century innovation, the Civil Rights Movement, the establishment of Black and tribal colleges, leading up to today. The impact of land-grant schools can be seen directly in their own communities and around the world; more than 3.5 million undergraduate and 1.1 million graduate students are currently enrolled. Many land-grant schools are first rate research institutions, working in fields as diverse as their student populations. "An Audacious Act" follows Ohio State University to Lima, Peru, where it is working with Peru's National Agrarian University to help small farmers learn the proper use of pesticides to keep food safe, and a student from China who chose to study statistics at North Carolina State because of its reputation in his field.

For the past few months, we've shared stories of the "working poor" -- people with jobs yet only scrape by paycheck to paycheck. These included a single mom working in fast food, an ex-felon with two jobs, a 30-something college graduate living in her parent's basement, and a senior citizen with no ready shot at retirement. The series was produced by ideastream's Brian Bull, and was informed in part by a 2004 book titled, "The Working Poor: Invisible in America." In our final installment of the series, Bull talks to the book's author, David K. Shipler, and asks what role the Great recession played in swelling the ranks of today's working poor.

Ebenezer Scrooge learns the error of his miserly ways in a supernatural tale from 1843, the moral of which has withstood the test of time. Some say this short story transformed Christmas into a major holiday. Before A Christmas Carol, there was surprisingly little celebration during the Christmas season. After its publication, the holiday became a high point of the year. Ohio-born Jonathan Winters recreates the story with an assist from Mimi Kennedy.

New national heart health guidelines may give pause to some Northeast Ohioans making preparations for a sumptuous Thanksgiving feast. The American College of Cardiology in association with the American Heart Association recently released new recommendations that would dramatically boost the number of people who take cholesterol-reducing statin drugs. Noted Cleveland Clinic cardiologist Steven Nissen calls it a “tectonic shift” in heart care, and that shift has produced an earthquake in the medical community. While some praise the guidelines as long overdue, others claim they are too severe. We’ll spend this hour, looking at the larger issue of heart health, the difference between good cholesterol and bad, what statins actually do, and who should take them. For the past few months, we’ve shared stories of the “working poor” -- people with jobs yet only scrape by paycheck to paycheck. These included a single mom working in fast food, an ex-felon with two jobs, a 30-something college graduate living in her parent’s basement, and a senior citizen with no ready shot at retirement. The series was produced by ideastream’s Brian Bull, and was informed in part by a 2004 book titled, “The Working Poor: Invisible in America.” In our final installment of the series, Bull talks to the book’s author, David K. Shipler, and asks what role the Great recession played in swelling the ranks of today’s working poor.

Animal Industrial Complex - Many have heard of the military-industrial complex, maybe even the prison-industrial complex, but the animal industrial complex? Probably not. But you should. It's huge. Meat consumption per capita in the U.S. exceeds all other countries except for Luxemburg. The U.S. with its ubiquitous fast food outlets might be called Burgerstan. But the love affair with meat may be waning. The Hindu-Buddhist roots of vegetarianism have gone way beyond their origins in South Asia. Today, adherents of vegetarianism can be found everywhere and in ever growing numbers. Concern about cruelty and violence to animals and the impact of meat eating on the environment are all contributing to heightened awareness as to how we treat other creatures. We share our homes and lives with dogs and cats. We lavish care and affection upon them. But other animals endure pain and suffering on their way to our dinner plates. David Nibert, a former tenant organizer and community activist, is an award-winning writer and professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield Ohio. He is the author of Animal Rights, Human Rights: Entanglements of and Animal Oppression and Human Violence.

Points:

The marathon bombings in Boston reminded us that violent Islamic extremism is everywhere, even on our own soil. In this edition of America Abroad, we will learn what sort of person is most vulnerable to extremist radicalization and the ways that other countries such as Britain, has had success keeping young people out of the life. We will check in on our own efforts in such communities as Minneapolis, home to the largest population of Somalis in the country. And we'll look at what more the U.S. should be doing to combat extremism both at home and around the world

Animal Industrial Complex - Many have heard of the military-industrial complex, maybe even the prison-industrial complex, but the animal industrial complex? Probably not. But you should. It's huge. Meat consumption per capita in the U.S. exceeds all other countries except for Luxemburg. The U.S. with its ubiquitous fast food outlets might be called Burgerstan. But the love affair with meat may be waning. The Hindu-Buddhist roots of vegetarianism have gone way beyond their origins in South Asia. Today, adherents of vegetarianism can be found everywhere and in ever growing numbers. Concern about cruelty and violence to animals and the impact of meat eating on the environment are all contributing to heightened awareness as to how we treat other creatures. We share our homes and lives with dogs and cats. We lavish care and affection upon them. But other animals endure pain and suffering on their way to our dinner plates. David Nibert, a former tenant organizer and community activist, is an award-winning writer and professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield Ohio. He is the author of Animal Rights, Human Rights: Entanglements of and Animal Oppression and Human Violence.

Media & Consumer Capitalism Rene Descartes, the 17th century French philosopher once said, "I think therefore I am." In today's context it may be more like, I buy therefore I am. Orchestrated wants driven by sophisticated advertising techniques have created a culture of consumption. Appetites for the latest hot thing are engineered. Media campaigns sell cool and sexy. Marketing is key. Data are collected. People are profiled, then targeted. Cell phones. Have to get the latest one with all new features, faster processor and design. We can't be left behind. More sales means more profits. The capitalist economic system is predicated on making money and barely considers the environmental effects down the road. That's somebody else's problem. In the U.S., consumerism is connected to ideology. Freedom is equated with the ability to buy things. But the pattern of endless consumption is not sustainable. Justin Lewis is Professor of Communication at the School of Journalism, Media and Cultural Studies, and Dean of Research for the College of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences at Cardiff University in the UK. He has written widely about media, culture and politics. His books include Constructing Public Opinion, Shoot First and Ask Questions Later, Climate Change and the Media, The World of 24 Hour News, and Beyond Consumer Capitalism.

Do you want the old Soviet Union? No way. But can't we imagine an economic system that is responsive to the needs of people and our precious planet rather than Wall Street and the investor class? Idealistic, you say? Maybe. But the fiscal ship is headed for a huge crash and no amount of moving the deck chairs around will avert it. Capitalism's tattered and moth-eaten clothes have fallen off, revealing a naked body that serves only the privileged few. Ninety-five percent of the economic gains, since the so-called recovery began are going to the top 1 percent. Meanwhile, median household income, adjusted for inflation, keeps dropping. The system is rigged to favor the rich.

Supporters of the performing and visual arts often speak of the enrichment they bring to audiences, but a first-ever, nationwide look at their economic impact is generating buzz as well. A federal report says in 2011 alone, arts and culture generated more than $500 billion, or 3.2 percent of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product. Host Mike McIntyre and his guests talked up the report - and its implications for arts-centric Cleveland – this morning on 90.3's the Sound of Ideas. Ideastream's Brian Bull reports.

New England Public Radio presents, "An Audacious Act: How a High School Dropout Helped Educate America." This hour-long documentary looks at 19th century Congressional legislation -- The Morrill Act -- that established many of the country's public universities and colleges or "land-grant" schools. The program is written, produced and hosted by veteran journalist, Lisa Mullins. The Morrill Act, signed into law by President Abraham Lincoln in 1862, has since helped educate more than 25 million students. It was passed during a tumultuous time in U.S. history, even before the cannons of the Civil War went silent. It's a fascinating story, winding its way through 20th century innovation, the Civil Rights Movement, the establishment of Black and tribal colleges, leading up to today. The impact of land-grant schools can be seen directly in their own communities and around the world; more than 3.5 million undergraduate and 1.1 million graduate students are currently enrolled. Many land-grant schools are first rate research institutions, working in fields as diverse as their student populations. "An Audacious Act" follows Ohio State University to Lima, Peru, where it is working with Peru's National Agrarian University to help small farmers learn the proper use of pesticides to keep food safe, and a student from China who chose to study statistics at North Carolina State because of its reputation in his field.

You know all about that abundant, dirt-cheap fossil fuel that's spurred the spectacular development of modern society? Turns out it's not as cheap as we thought. Hydrocarbon energy releases enormous amounts of heat-trapping gases into the atmosphere, and the Earth's oceans absorb about 80 percent of that heat. That means sea levels are rising, and they'll continue to rise for hundreds of years to come. The next BURN explores sea-level rise in south Florida, along the Louisiana/Texas Gulf Coast, in New York City, and in Greenland.

Major Guests:

N/A

Points:

New England Public Radio presents, "An Audacious Act: How a High School Dropout Helped Educate America." This hour-long documentary looks at 19th century Congressional legislation -- The Morrill Act -- that established many of the country's public universities and colleges or "land-grant" schools. The program is written, produced and hosted by veteran journalist, Lisa Mullins. The Morrill Act, signed into law by President Abraham Lincoln in 1862, has since helped educate more than 25 million students. It was passed during a tumultuous time in U.S. history, even before the cannons of the Civil War went silent. It's a fascinating story, winding its way through 20th century innovation, the Civil Rights Movement, the establishment of Black and tribal colleges, leading up to today. The impact of land-grant schools can be seen directly in their own communities and around the world; more than 3.5 million undergraduate and 1.1 million graduate students are currently enrolled. Many land-grant schools are first rate research institutions, working in fields as diverse as their student populations. "An Audacious Act" follows Ohio State University to Lima, Peru, where it is working with Peru's National Agrarian University to help small farmers learn the proper use of pesticides to keep food safe, and a student from China who chose to study statistics at North Carolina State because of its reputation in his field.

Ohio voters who say they are fed up with the current political system often find it's difficult to change it. As Ohio Public Radio's Jo Ingles reported yesterday, many people who study politics say it's not as simple as voting incumbents out of office. They say you have to change the process for determining which areas are represented by which candidates. In the second of this two part series, Ingles explains attempts to change the overall process of determining how congressional and legislative districts are drawn have proven difficult.

Animal Industrial Complex - Many have heard of the military-industrial complex, maybe even the prison-industrial complex, but the animal industrial complex? Probably not. But you should. It's huge. Meat consumption per capita in the U.S. exceeds all other countries except for Luxemburg. The U.S. with its ubiquitous fast food outlets might be called Burgerstan. But the love affair with meat may be waning. The Hindu-Buddhist roots of vegetarianism have gone way beyond their origins in South Asia. Today, adherents of vegetarianism can be found everywhere and in ever growing numbers. Concern about cruelty and violence to animals and the impact of meat eating on the environment are all contributing to heightened awareness as to how we treat other creatures. We share our homes and lives with dogs and cats. We lavish care and affection upon them. But other animals endure pain and suffering on their way to our dinner plates. David Nibert, a former tenant organizer and community activist, is an award-winning writer and professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield Ohio. He is the author of Animal Rights, Human Rights: Entanglements of and Animal Oppression and Human Violence.

Slow Democracy Conventional democracy is being eviscerated. Frustration is mounting with business as usual models dominated by centralized institutions. But there are new initiatives. Local solutions to local problems which incorporate decision-making processes that are inclusive, deliberative and citizen powered are growing increasingly popular. From control of utilities to water and school issues to resisting fracking, communities are asserting themselves. Instead of seeing politics as something remote and out of reach, there are other possibilities closer to home. Slow democracy allows for space to find common ground and compromise and for communities to make choices that are ecologically, economically, and socially sustainable. The old no prisoners attitude may be emotionally satisfying but often results in nothing more than bombast. Local citizen participation gives not just insight and knowledge in addressing community matters but also in a sense ownership of the outcomes.

Gun ownership and homicide rates are higher in the U.S. than in any other developed nation, but gun violence has decreased over the last two decades even as gun ownership may be increasing. Over 200 years have passed since James Madison introduced the Bill of Rights, the country has changed, and so have it guns. Is the right to bear arms now at odds with the common good, or is it as necessary today as it was in 1789?

Animal Industrial Complex - Many have heard of the military-industrial complex, maybe even the prison-industrial complex, but the animal industrial complex? Probably not. But you should. It's huge. Meat consumption per capita in the U.S. exceeds all other countries except for Luxemburg. The U.S. with its ubiquitous fast food outlets might be called Burgerstan. But the love affair with meat may be waning. The Hindu-Buddhist roots of vegetarianism have gone way beyond their origins in South Asia. Today, adherents of vegetarianism can be found everywhere and in ever growing numbers. Concern about cruelty and violence to animals and the impact of meat eating on the environment are all contributing to heightened awareness as to how we treat other creatures. We share our homes and lives with dogs and cats. We lavish care and affection upon them. But other animals endure pain and suffering on their way to our dinner plates. David Nibert, a former tenant organizer and community activist, is an award-winning writer and professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield Ohio. Segment Title: Be Well: Holiday stress getting to you?

Major Guests:

Ah, the holidays. This time of year can be one filled with joy and family. And a lot of physical and emotional demands.

For those of us taking a week or two off, there's a lot to be done at work before we can leave. On the home front, the house may need to be cleaned and readied for visitors, or you're organizing what to pack for travel.

There's the challenge of wrapping up the long holiday to-do lists. Cookies need to be baked. Christmas cards should have been mailed by now. Plus, this week is the deadline for buying presents for all those teachers, bosses and co-workers.

Maureen Gallagher Ioannou, a nurse practitioner at MetroHealth, has advise for all those who might be stressed out or on their way to being overwhelmed:

"You can't do everything. I think in the past, I've tried to do that, you try to get up at like five a.m., Ok, you know, I'm going to do the cookies, I'm going to frost the cupcakes and then I'm going to try to get everything ready. And, you know you realize you can go buy something. I think it's more important that you, you know, you maybe go to the Christmas concert. You can't do everything. Try to just figure out what really is important and be happier," Ioannou said.

In addition to the frantic pace of the holidays, this is also a season when larger life issues can also take a toll, Ioannou said.

Problems at work, strained family relationships, illness or death of friends or family can also be a factor for a lot of people during the holidays.

Wendell Fellows sat in the front row of a stress workshop held by Ioannou recently and opened up about some of the emotional struggles he faces this holiday season. He said he was there learn coping techniques.

"You know certain people in my family passed away and sick and stuff like that, so it's kind of like to keep my mind together and stop thinking about them so much," Fellows said, adding that he was there to learn coping techniques.

First, Ioannou stressed that if you feel really sad, to see a professional. But she also gave some practical advice that works for dealing with that daily overly busy stress as well as the larger life issues that Fellows is juggling.

Do the obvious things, get enough sleep, get enough exercise, make sure you're prioritizing what's important and what's not important. And just try to take one day at a time and everything one step at a time, otherwise, I think it's very easy to get overwhelmed," Ioannou said.

Ioannou told Fellows and the others that they needed to listen to the needs of their minds and bodies closely. And she coached them on breathing and offered suggestions like rubbing your temples to relieve pressure in the head and rolling your shoulders to loosen stiff neck muscles.

Fellows said he does the relaxation techniques at home and they do help.

Points:

It's December 17 and we are in the thick of the holiday season. For many of us, it's easy to get stressed out. On a recent evening, ideastream health reporter Sarah Jane Tribble dropped into a class at MetroHealth System's Middleburg Heights location to learn how to manage all the stress that can build up around this time of year. Tribble joins Morning Edition Host Rick Jackson to talk about coping techniques.

Segment Title: Be Well: Holiday stress getting to you?

Major Guests:

Ah, the holidays. This time of year can be one filled with joy and family. And a lot of physical and emotional demands.

For those of us taking a week or two off, there's a lot to be done at work before we can leave. On the home front, the house may need to be cleaned and readied for visitors, or you're organizing what to pack for travel.

There's the challenge of wrapping up the long holiday to-do lists. Cookies need to be baked. Christmas cards should have been mailed by now. Plus, this week is the deadline for buying presents for all those teachers, bosses and co-workers.

Maureen Gallagher Ioannou, a nurse practitioner at MetroHealth, has advise for all those who might be stressed out or on their way to being overwhelmed:

"You can't do everything. I think in the past, I've tried to do that, you try to get up at like five a.m., Ok, you know, I'm going to do the cookies, I'm going to frost the cupcakes and then I'm going to try to get everything ready. And, you know you realize you can go buy something. I think it's more important that you, you know, you maybe go to the Christmas concert. You can't do everything. Try to just figure out what really is important and be happier," Ioannou said.

In addition to the frantic pace of the holidays, this is also a season when larger life issues can also take a toll, Ioannou said.

Problems at work, strained family relationships, illness or death of friends or family can also be a factor for a lot of people during the holidays.

Wendell Fellows sat in the front row of a stress workshop held by Ioannou recently and opened up about some of the emotional struggles he faces this holiday season. He said he was there learn coping techniques.

"You know certain people in my family passed away and sick and stuff like that, so it's kind of like to keep my mind together and stop thinking about them so much," Fellows said, adding that he was there to learn coping techniques.

First, Ioannou stressed that if you feel really sad, to see a professional. But she also gave some practical advice that works for dealing with that daily overly busy stress as well as the larger life issues that Fellows is juggling.

Do the obvious things, get enough sleep, get enough exercise, make sure you're prioritizing what's important and what's not important. And just try to take one day at a time and everything one step at a time, otherwise, I think it's very easy to get overwhelmed," Ioannou said.

Ioannou told Fellows and the others that they needed to listen to the needs of their minds and bodies closely. And she coached them on breathing and offered suggestions like rubbing your temples to relieve pressure in the head and rolling your shoulders to loosen stiff neck muscles.

Fellows said he does the relaxation techniques at home and they do help.

Points:

It's December 17 and we are in the thick of the holiday season. For many of us, it's easy to get stressed out. On a recent evening, ideastream health reporter Sarah Jane Tribble dropped into a class at MetroHealth System's Middleburg Heights location to learn how to manage all the stress that can build up around this time of year. Tribble joins Morning Edition Host Rick Jackson to talk about coping techniques.

Animal Industrial Complex - Many have heard of the military-industrial complex, maybe even the prison-industrial complex, but the animal industrial complex? Probably not. But you should. It's huge. Meat consumption per capita in the U.S. exceeds all other countries except for Luxemburg. The U.S. with its ubiquitous fast food outlets might be called Burgerstan. But the love affair with meat may be waning. The Hindu-Buddhist roots of vegetarianism have gone way beyond their origins in South Asia. Today, adherents of vegetarianism can be found everywhere and in ever growing numbers. Concern about cruelty and violence to animals and the impact of meat eating on the environment are all contributing to heightened awareness as to how we treat other creatures. We share our homes and lives with dogs and cats. We lavish care and affection upon them. But other animals endure pain and suffering on their way to our dinner plates. David Nibert, a former tenant organizer and community activist, is an award-winning writer and professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield Ohio. He is the author of Animal Rights, Human Rights: Entanglements of and Animal Oppression and Human Violence.

Media & Consumer Capitalism Rene Descartes, the 17th century French philosopher once said, "I think therefore I am." In today's context it may be more like, I buy therefore I am. Orchestrated wants driven by sophisticated advertising techniques have created a culture of consumption. Appetites for the latest hot thing are engineered. Media campaigns sell cool and sexy. Marketing is key. Data are collected. People are profiled, then targeted. Cell phones. Have to get the latest one with all new features, faster processor and design. We can't be left behind. More sales means more profits. The capitalist economic system is predicated on making money and barely considers the environmental effects down the road. That's somebody else's problem. In the U.S., consumerism is connected to ideology. Freedom is equated with the ability to buy things. But the pattern of endless consumption is not sustainable. Justin Lewis is Professor of Communication at the School of Journalism, Media and Cultural Studies, and Dean of Research for the College of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences at Cardiff University in the UK. He has written widely about media, culture and politics. His books include Constructing Public Opinion, Shoot First and Ask Questions Later, Climate Change and the Media, The World of 24 Hour News, and Beyond Consumer Capitalism.

Naked Capitalism Through its myriad booms and busts, capitalism manages to roll with the punches and emerge standing. We are constantly told: it's the only show in town. Do you want the old Soviet Union? No way. But can't we imagine an economic system that is responsive to the needs of people and our precious planet rather than Wall Street and the investor class? Idealistic, you say? Maybe. But the fiscal ship is headed for a huge crash and no amount of moving the deck chairs around will avert it. Capitalism's tattered and moth-eaten clothes have fallen off, revealing a naked body that serves only the privileged few. Ninety-five percent of the economic gains, since the so-called recovery began are going to the top 1 percent. Meanwhile, median household income, adjusted for inflation, keeps dropping. The system is rigged to favor the rich.

Media & Consumer Capitalism Rene Descartes, the 17th century French philosopher once said, "I think therefore I am." In today's context it may be more like, I buy therefore I am. Orchestrated wants driven by sophisticated advertising techniques have created a culture of consumption. Appetites for the latest hot thing are engineered. Media campaigns sell cool and sexy. Marketing is key. Data are collected. People are profiled, then targeted. Cell phones. Have to get the latest one with all new features, faster processor and design. We can't be left behind. More sales means more profits. The capitalist economic system is predicated on making money and barely considers the environmental effects down the road. That's somebody else's problem. In the U.S., consumerism is connected to ideology. Freedom is equated with the ability to buy things. But the pattern of endless consumption is not sustainable. Justin Lewis is Professor of Communication at the School of Journalism, Media and Cultural Studies, and Dean of Research for the College of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences at Cardiff University in the UK. He has written widely about media, culture and politics. His books include Constructing Public Opinion, Shoot First and Ask Questions

Later, Climate Change and the Media, The World of 24 Hour News, and Beyond Consumer Capitalism.

Naked Capitalism Through its myriad booms and busts, capitalism manages to roll with the punches and emerge standing. We are constantly told: it's the only show in town. Do you want the old Soviet Union? No way. But can't we imagine an economic system that is responsive to the needs of people and our precious planet rather than Wall Street and the investor class? Idealistic, you say? Maybe. But the fiscal ship is headed for a huge crash and no amount of moving the deck chairs around will avert it. Capitalism's tattered and moth-eaten clothes have fallen off, revealing a naked body that serves only the privileged few. Ninety-five percent of the economic gains, since the so-called recovery began are going to the top 1 percent. Meanwhile, median household income, adjusted for inflation, keeps dropping. The system is rigged to favor the rich.

That means sea levels are rising, and they'll continue to rise for hundreds of years to come.
