Homelessness Housing/Hunger	Local News	6/28/2020	7:30pm	n/a	The South Vienna/Springfield area and the entire "rust belt" of Ohio is mired in generational poverty. Ms. Fox explained that there's a problem with how most non-profits and faith-based groups approach the problem of poverty and address it with lasting results. We have a culture of "helping" and we approach the person in poverty as an expert with answers when they are really poverty expert. Poverty sort of "runs in the background" like a computer app that we don't really engage with. Addiction and food insecurity are both drivers and results of poverty. Think Tank tries to get groups close to the causes and results of poverty and then ask the question, "Is our help really helping?" We try to "fix" and may manage surface needs in the moment but don't address how we can make poverty escapable. Ms. Fox illustrated this with a personal story. The people in poverty may have ideas but the "givers" have put themselves in the position of expert and won't let those in poverty bring their ideas and become part of the solution. People who need help are not deficient – they need to be heard. We look at Jesus as a model of that. Ms. Fox then outlined Think Tank's strategy/set of essential practices and discussed their programs, including COPE and ACTS. They work with all types of groups and communities, from faith-based and grassroots organizations to schools to large corporations. COPE, or Cost Of Poverty Experience, brings groups and individuals together for a day of an immersive experience that puts them in the role of a person in poverty and lets them see what it is to live in that world. It's been used in 39 states and over 40,000 people have been through the experience. The faith-based group version is ACTS. She said there are many success stories and gave one individual ones. She then shared her hope for Think Tank's future , gave their contact information, and shared info about their blog and podcast.
