Description: Bill Higgs, an authority on corporate culture and ForbesBooks author of the upcoming book Culture Code Champions: 7 Steps to Scale & Succeed in Your Business, says that an unhealthy culture in a company isn't just bad for employees. It also can cost your business millions of dollars in revenue and bottom-line profit.

“People are the crux of any organization’s success,” Higgs says. “But many businesses don’t take any intentional steps to create an energetic, positive work environment that spirals people’s attitudes upward. Yet, the right culture can help you create a ‘cycle-proof’ business that can grow even during your industry’s bust cycles that inflict economic pain on competitors.”

He will discuss for your listeners why it's important for businesses to create a workplace culture where employees look forward to, rather than dread, coming to work.

McClain says, "More and more, companies are starting to understand that they need to show employees that they value them as whole people. If you respect them, value them and treat them as professionals, they will go through walls for you. If you don't, if you create an environment where the very thought of coming to work creates anxiety, then they are going to look for employment elsewhere."

Saving for college may be the last thing we want to worry about but probably one of the things that needs to move to the front of our family economics mental cues. These things can be so tricky, luckily, there are people in this community who specialize in making this not only more straight forward but also successful. Luke today tells us about WA529.

Description:

STEM is a super great buzzword we hear a lot of in the greater Seattle region. It's an acronym for Science Technology Engineering and Math - skills for students to build a future based in critical thinking. As with many things, there's a shortcoming for STEM students in minority and impoverished communities. The Big-Brained Superheroes Club are helping immigrant and refugee kids keep up!

Description:

During the coronavirus social distancing, many Seattle artists have taken to the internet to find their own creative space and give back to the fans that support them through when we're more able to congregate. During one such performance, an artist called Ben Gibbard best known as the singer guitarist of Death Cab for Cutie, deliberately slipped in a mention for a local charity, Teen Feed. Thanks to Ben for generating a ton of donations with that mention, but I wanted to find out more about what it is that they do.

Description:

The restaurant and hospitality industry is a massive one employing people in every city, town, village everywhere. Who are the people in the puget sound that make that workforce move and what happens when the industry is effectively switched off in a time of crisis. Kevin is here today to help us understand better this industry and its needs.

Description:

A city's vibrance and cultural identity is often directly reflected by the restaurant and hospitality businesses and the people who run them. In the time of economic crisis - what will happen to the identity of our neighborhoods around Puget Sound? A team of concerned citizens formed Seattle Restaurants United to help ensure the best possible outcome in trying difficult and rapidly changing times.
