Topic: U.S. mid-term elections: Senate election is stalemate, the two parties will fight in the three major battleground states

In the U.S. 2022 mid-term elections, election campaigns between Democratic and the Republican Parties have entered a fierce stage, and both parties hope to grab votes in the final sprint. It is generally predicted that the chances of the Republican Party becoming the majority party in the House of Representatives after this election are quite high. However, the election for the Senate is still a stalemate, and it is still difficult to decide who the final winner of the majority party status contest is.

Topic: New Yorker complains that NYC public sanitary infrastructure is the least developed

A recent incident from a woman traveling from Brooklyn into Manhattan by subway led her to raise complaint on the sanitary infrastructural of NY's transit system. This female passenger felt sick during her commute to the City while in subway and tried to get to the nearest subway public toilet at the Brooklyn Barclay Center station thinking that it's a big station that supposedly can handle many transits would have a sanitary accommodating facility. But she was surprised that the very few that she can find were locked and transit/subway staff refused to let her use it, thus caused her to poop in her pant. She felt angry and ashamed and made public complaint to let the City know that it's public sanitary infrastructural is comparable with the third world countries.
