Executive Action on Guns, North Korean Nuclear Threat and Countdown to Iowa & NH: During a speech in front of families of gun violence victims, President Obama announced new executive actions to curb gun violence including expanding background checks and mental health screenings. But Congressional leaders and the NRA expressed their disapproval at the president's attempts to bypass Congress. Real Clear Politics' Alexis Simendinger explains the debate. Meanwhile, North Korea claimed this week to have successfully tested a hydrogen bomb. While U.S. leaders question the claims, The New York Times'

David Sanger explains the global condemnation. And on the 2016 campaign trail, Republican frontrunner Donald Trump is questioning his GOP rival Ted Cruz's eligibility to run because he was born in Canada. On the Democratic side, former President Bill Clinton hits the campaign trail for his wife Hillary Clinton. With less than a month until the Iowa caucus, TIME's Michael Scherer and The Atlantic's Molly Ball report on the state of the race.

Doctors and End-of-Life Discussions: Many hospital patients who don't express their end-of-life wishes receive aggressive treatments that even their doctors say they wouldn't want for themselves. According to Dr. Phil Pizzo, dean emeritus of Stanford University School of Medicine, 80 to 95 percent of doctors say "they want to die outside the hospital. They want to die at home. They want to have their family around them. They don't want to be on life support systems." Yet most doctors never have honest end-of-life discussions with their patients. Dr. VJ Periyakoil, director of palliative care education and training at Stanford University School of Medicine, has created the Stanford Letter Project to help patients and families express for their doctors what matters most to them at the end of life.

In the first Republican presidential debate of 2016, frontrunners Donald Trump and Ted Cruz traded jabs over Cruz's eligibility for the nation's top job because of his Canadian birth and what Cruz means by "New York values." On the Democratic side, with two weeks until the Iowa caucuses, the race between Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders has tightened in critical first states. The Washington Post's Karen Tumulty and AP's Lisa Lerer explain the state of the race. Plus, President Obama delivered his final State of the Union address. The New York Times' Peter Baker and CNN's Manu Raju report on what the president hopes to accomplish in his final year and whether Congressional Republicans will help his agenda.

Executive Action on Guns, North Korean Nuclear Threat and Countdown to Iowa & NH: During a speech in front of families of gun violence victims, President Obama announced new executive actions to curb gun violence including expanding background checks and mental health screenings. But Congressional leaders and the NRA expressed their disapproval at the president's attempts to bypass Congress. Real Clear Politics' Alexis Simendinger explains the debate. Meanwhile, North Korea claimed this week to have successfully tested a hydrogen bomb. While U.S. leaders question the claims, The New York Times' David Sanger explains the global condemnation. And on the 2016 campaign trail, Republican frontrunner Donald Trump is questioning his GOP rival Ted Cruz's eligibility to run because he was born in Canada. On the Democratic side, former President Bill Clinton hits the campaign trail for his wife Hillary Clinton. With less than a month until the Iowa caucus, TIME's Michael Scherer and The Atlantic's Molly Ball report on the state of the race.
