Laura Lichter former president of the bar of immigration lawyers of the country ensures that the executive action is not the final solution to the problem. The executive action will benefit parents of citizens who could obtain a work permit, social security number and identification. It would also promote naturalization of residents and raise wages to employees of national security. President Obama would have to act before the 11th of December, deadline for the law of expenses. Republicans threatened with not giving one penny of taxes to the white house for the executive action.

ISSUE:
MEDICAL MARIJUANA USE

Marijuana Workplace

Program: 10 PM EVENING NEWS

When: October 1, 2014

Description of Program:

If the use of medical marijuana is not illegal, is it “legal” for employers to dismiss employees for using it? This is a judicial case that has sparked debate. The Dish Network Company fired an employee whom they say was using drugs. This case is being observed very closely all over the country and could have large implications for consumers of medical marijuana. The court decision may also affect how companies treat the subject with their employees who use the drug as medicine. Brandon Coats sued Dish Network, the company where he worked and who fired him for supposedly using drugs. A hearing at the Supreme Court in Colorado took place yesterday and may have important implications for the regulation and use of medical marijuana before and after work hours.
