WETA-FM and WGMS-FM cover areas of interest for the greater Washington, Frederick and Hagerstown communities through broadcasts produced by NPR and PBS. These programs are selected for quality and appropriate content, presentation and technical excellence, with our audience – real and potential – in mind.

We continue to broadcast NPR's "From the Top." From the Top is a non-profit organization that encourages and celebrates the commitment of young people to music and the arts through a variety of media, including nationally broadcast radio shows. The show aims to entertain, educate and connect young musicians, their parents and teachers. It features young musicians who, along with the host, Chris O'Reilly, demonstrate that classical music has a place in youth culture.

We also continue to broadcast PBS' NewsHour, a news program hosted by Gwen Ifill and Judy Woodruff that airs each weekday from 7-8 PM. NewsHour presents coverage of a wide range of subjects, as below:

The Supreme Court announced it would take up a case on the tax subsidies of the Affordable Care Act that could have major implications for the health care law. The Court also considered whether a man's violence-filled rants on Facebook about his ex-wife -- posts that led to his arrest -- were protected by the First Amendment. Also this quarter, the Supreme Court heard arguments in the case of Peggy Young, a former UPS driver who says the company discriminated against her when she was pregnant. UPS placed Young on unpaid leave for several months because she was unable to perform her required duties, they said.

In National news, foreign relations were at the front of many reports. Although negotiations came to a kind of stalemate over sharp limits on Iran's uranium enrichment capability, the United States re-established diplomatic relations with Cuba after more than 50 years of hostility and isolation. President Obama announced a rapprochement between the two countries, which includes expanding economic ties and easing some conditions of the travel ban. A Senate Intelligence Committee report on the CIA's post-9/11 interrogation tactics accused the agency of deceiving the White House, Congress and the American people. The Senate's findings suggest the enhanced interrogation program was "far more brutal" than previously disclosed. Demonstrations have swept from coast to coast over a pair of grand jury non-indictments in cases where black men were killed by police officers, laying bare a deep vein of distrust in law enforcement and the justice system. The murder of two New York City police officers ignited a volley of blame, and exposed the deep rifts dividing a city in mourning. After six years of financial stimulus to mitigate the fallout from the 2008 collapse, the Federal Reserve is ending its money creation programs. But the country is still in economic recovery, and the role of the Federal Reserve is still being debated. Also, for the first time since 2008, the unemployment rate has fallen below 6 percent.

This quarter's International news included stories on the increasing power and influence of the Islamic State in the Middle East. The Islamic State has gained notoriety for their beheadings and mass executions, but the group has also abducted thousands of women to make into sex slaves; the Islamic State claimed responsibility for a suicide bomb attack that killed 23 people in a Shiite neighborhood of Baghdad, and continue to advance along the Syria-Turkey border, despite ongoing U.S. airstrikes supported by regional allies. Taliban gunmen stormed a military-run school in Peshawar, Pakistan, killing scores of young students. The Pakistani Taliban claimed it was in retaliation for a new government military offensive. Conflict continued between Russia and the Ukraine; separatists held an election in the breakaway regions of Eastern Ukraine, asserting their independence from Kiev. Ukrainian officials denounced the vote, saying it was in direct violation of an agreement with Russia. Russia's central bank hiked a key interest rate nearly 7 points overnight in a dramatic move to stabilize the economy. The ruble has lost 60 percent of its value since January, and Russians have been feeling the economic pinch of inflation. More than 50 arrests have been made in connection to the disappearance of 43 college students in the Guerrero province of Mexico, but authorities still don't know where to find the missing young men in the weeks since their disappearance.

Media, Arts and Culture marked the passing of several artists and personalities, including: Washington Post editor Ben Bradlee, Pulitzer-Prize winning poet Galway Kinnell, and acclaimed director Mike Nichols. In the field of space exploration, for the first time in more than four decades, NASA is set to launch a space capsule, the unmanned Orion spacecraft, which has grander plans of human exploration into deep space. Also this quarter, the European Space Agency landed a small spacecraft, one the size of a washing machine, on a moving comet speeding through the solar system. The Rosetta spacecraft's Philae lander took photos of the comet as it descended. And a team of scientists in northern Chile is using a network of telescopes around the globe to capture an image of a black hole for the first time, to prove Einstein's Theory of General Relativity. This year, a challenge to Facebook users to douse themselves in ice water became an internet craze, raising millions for ALS, or Lou Gehrig's disease. In remarks for Christmas before the Roman Curia, Pope Francis delivered a scathing review of the behavior of Vatican officials, decrying the "spiritual Alzheimers" that makes them forget their real purpose. This year's Nobel Peace Prize winners, Malala Yousafzai and Kailash Satyarthi, have been leading advocates for the rights of children on issues like child slavery and universal education.

Health and Healthcare featured several stories on the Ebola situation both in the U.S. and abroad. The director of the World Health Organization called Ebola's ravaging effects on West Africa a "crisis for international peace and security." Dozens of people who had initial contact with Thomas Eric Duncan, the Liberian man who died of Ebola in Dallas, were deemed safe to leave quarantine after weeks of monitoring. More than 100 others, including those who cared for him, are still being watched. Meanwhile, Nigeria was declared Ebola-free by the World Health Organization. The World Health Organization reported that Liberia and Guinea have met two key targets. They're now isolating 70 percent of those infected, and ensuring safe burials for 70 percent of those who have died. More than 6,900 people have been killed by the virus during this outbreak. A Bulgarian man who was paralyzed from the chest down after a 2010 stabbing can now walk after a pioneering transplant in Poland. Cells from the man's nose were used to repair his spinal nerves in a surgery that gives thousands of paralytics new hope for movement. The FDA is set to ease a 31-year ban on blood donations by gay men, put in place in the early days of the AIDS crisis. The policy revision will allow gay men to donate blood one year after their last sexual contact, which could free hundreds of thousands of pints a year.

Regarding the Military, after 13 years, a major mission for U.S. forces and others in Afghanistan came to its official end with little fanfare. The U.S. combat mission has been winding down since 2010, but the Taliban has been mounting a resurgence, making 2014 the war's deadliest year. Some 2,500 dogs have accompanied American warriors on patrol and in close combat in Iraq and Afghanistan. Tasks like bomb detection and protection demand dedication to their human handlers, with whom they often form a special bond in the face of danger. Rebecca Frankel, a senior editor at "Foreign Policy" magazine, whose "War Dog of the Week" is a signature online feature, writes about all this in a new book: "War Dogs: Tales of Canine Heroism, History and Love."

With elections held in November, there were several feature stories on politics and campaigns. Democrats and Republicans eyed at least 10 races where independent and third-party candidates could help swing the outcome on Election Day. In addition to recalibrating the balance of power on Capitol Hill, the upcoming elections dictate important state policy around the nation. One battle is brewing in North Dakota, where environmentalists are seeking tax revenue for preservation. Voter turnout for this year's midterm elections was the lowest since 1942, but spending for congressional elections spiked at a record $4 billion. Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, chair of Democratic National Committee, says that American voters support Democrats on the issues, even if their candidates didn't fare well in the midterm elections. The GOP gained control of the House and the Senate during the fall election.

Reports on Education looked at increasing success for at-risk students. In Alaska, roughly three out of four teachers are from out of state, and more likely to stay for a shorter period of time than those who were born and raised there. The News Hour reports from the town of Dillingham, where educators are trying to encourage local and Alaska Native students to consider teaching in communities where they are desperately needed. The high school graduation rate for Native Americans is the lowest of any ethnic or racial group in the United States. One story looks at how the government can assist reservation schools while respecting autonomy of tribes. University of Chicago President Robert Zimmer announced a plan that will replace loans with grants, simplify the application process, and ensure that some students don't have to take jobs during the academic year. University officials said the changes will build on programs for lower-income students at the school.
