Sep 14, 2018 – 6:20-6:24pm – Special News Release - (HARRISBURG) – State recovery aid to assist in streambank restoration and flood recovery efforts is now available in certain counties, according to Senator John R. Gordner (R-27). The United States Department of Agriculture Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) will provide 75 percent of restoration funding, but requires a 25 percent match. Today, Governor Tom Wolf directed the Department of Environmental Protection to provide the required cost-share for eligible projects, up to $6.25 million, resulting in no cost to local governments. “There has been significant flooding over the course of this summer in parts of my district,” said Senator Gordner. “I am grateful that Governor Tom Wolf has authorized the usage of state money to allow local municipalities to undertake some streambank restoration and recovery projects without the expenditure of local tax dollars.” Funding will be available for 17 counties across the state, including Columbia, Montour and Luzerne that fall within the 27th Senatorial District. Applications for projects related to the flooding that occurred in the summer of 2018 will be accepted by NRCS until October 15, 2018.
