Immortalized by Woody Guthrie, 'Deportees' Who Died in Plane Crash Are Nameless No Longer

One cold winter morning in 1948, 32 passengers were killed when a plane crashed in Los Gatos Canyon, near the Central Valley town of Coalinga. The dead included 28 Mexican farmworkers in the process of being deported by the U.S. government. Woody Guthrie was outraged that newspaper accounts of the crash omitted the names of the Mexican passengers, so he gave symbolic names to the dead in his song, "Deportee." For seven decades, the names of those deportees were anonymous, until Tim Z. Hernandez, recipient of the American Book Award for poetry, spent years investigating, interviewing families and unearthing records in both Mexico and the United States.

Despite Political Differences, Two High School Teachers Find Common Ground

For our series "Start the Conversation," we bring together Californians from different backgrounds and perspectives to talk about their political differences, but to also try and figure out common ground. For high school teachers like Brandon Johnson and Ysidro Valenzuela, the latest presidential election and its aftermath have brought many more questions than usual from their students. The two teachers answer those questions from different political perspectives: Brandon is a former marine who identifies as conservative. He's part of a small minority in the Bay Area that voted for Trump. Ysidro is liberal and supported Sanders, though he lives in the more politically conservative Central Valley.

Attorney Robert Rubin Continues Lifelong Fight for Social Justice

Whether we're teachers, software engineers or chefs, many of us end up in our careers in unexpected ways. Today, we're going to hear a story about how civil rights attorney Robert Rubin went from teaching people with disabilities to becoming a lawyer. He's played a role in major legal battles that have helped shape our state, with a nearly perfect track record when it comes to winning cases. Reporter: Parth Shah

At 17, This Mariachi Veteran Is Releasing Her First Poetry Album

Ask anybody in the California mariachi scene, and they'll know the Morales family from the Central Valley town of Delano. Juan Morales played with mariachi superstars Los Camperos and his daughters played at Carnegie Hall earlier this year with the group Mariachi Mestizo. Now one member of the family is exploring another art form: Teenager Xochitl Morales is about to release her first album, and it's not mariachi music. It's spoken-word poetry. Oakland Homeless Encampments: Too Big to Ignore

Lately, we've been hearing a lot from our listeners when we air profiles of homeless people in California. A couple of weeks ago, many of you responded with offers of help after hearing our special "Homeless U?" - checking back in on the homeless college students we've been following. Now we're going to turn to a story about a group most people think of when they think about homelessness: people who live in tent cities. More of these encampments have been sprouting up in many of California's largest cities, lining streets and freeway underpasses. You see that a lot in Oakland, a place that prides itself on tackling social issues. But the city's struggled to help homeless encampments while also trying to welcome new development. KQED's Devin Katayama spent time with some residents in one of those encampments, and tells us about what makes these homeless communities vulnerable, and also, strong. Reporter: Devin Katayama

In a Startup and Cash-Out World, One Silicon Valley Restaurant Keeps It Homespun

Silicon Valley is a place that's all about fast-paced change. The Valley's startup and cash-out culture means companies frequently change owners, get new bosses, and take on new identities. But there are exceptions. As part of a new series we're calling Family Biz, The California Report's Ryan Levi tells us about one Silicon Valley restaurant that's working to keep things the way they've been for forty years. Reporter: Ryan Levi

Days of Future Past With Kronos Quartet and Nicole Mitchell's Black Earth Ensemble

Producer Suzie Racho talks with The California Report's jazz critic Andrew Gilbert about some new music from Golden State artists. We hear about two new albums: one reinvents the past, while the other conjures up a utopian future. Reporter: Suzie Racho

There's a Cancer-Causing Chemical in My Drinking Water. California Will Finally Regulate It

More than 25 years after the state determined a chemical called 123 TCP caused cancer, this week, the California water board voted to regulate the chemical in our drinking water. Last year, I did a story about this cancer-causing chemical. I was worried because my family may have been drinking it. Let's rewind to last spring, and take a listen. Reporter: Sasha Kohkha

In Southern California, One Woman Works to Heal a Forgotten Community of Nuclear Refugees

We meet a woman in Orange County who had a front row seat to the Cold War. She grew up on the small, tropical Marshall Islands where the U.S. military tested and detonated 67 nuclear weapons during the Cold War. The indigenous residents were uprooted and scattered across the world. The first group settled here in California in Costa Mesa. That's where reporter Sarah Craig met Greta Briand, who is helping the Marshall Islanders still coping with those long-ago nuclear experiments.

The Painful Side of Positive Health Care Marketing

A couple decades ago, hospital and clinics didn't advertise much. Now they're spending more and more each year trying to attract patients in an increasingly competitive market. The ads are often positive and hopeful: happy patients and miraculous recovery stories. But if you're really sick and not getting better, this kind of health care marketing can be jarring. Sam Harnett introduces us to a woman in San Jose who's angry about that peppy messaging.

Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and...Oyster? A Year of Ice Cream

The Mission Hill Creamery in Santa Cruz is the neighborhood ice cream shop for author Amy Ettinger, who spent a year researching, tasting, digging into the history and sociology of ice cream. Her new book is called "Sweet Spot: An Ice Cream Binge Across America." Host Sasha Khokha met Ettinger at Mission Hill to talk ice cream over some drippy, delicious scoops.

Yoga is the Cat's Meow in California

It's Monday evening at a yoga class in San Francisco. Eight people are resting in child's pose on their mats, breathing deeply...with cats. The California Report's Bianca Taylor takes us to cat yoga.

Jailing Immigrants Means Money and Jobs for Poor Areas. Is This Deal Humane?

The culmination of a nine-month investigation into a local jail in rural Yuba County by KQED reporters Lisa Pickoff-White and Julie Small. The jail depends on millions of dollars a year from the federal government to hold immigrants facing deportation. But the jail has come under fire for poor medical care. We talk to an inmate who was seriously ill and says jail doctors wouldn't give him the medicine. We also hear from Yuba County locals who depend on money from the jail to fund the sheriff's department. They say the county's getting caught in the political crossfire over immigration.

How a 'Hippie Clinic' in the Haight-Ashbury Started a Medical Revolution

San Francisco. 50 years ago. The Summer of Love. A time now synonymous with hippies, music, flowers and drugs. But it was also a summer of sickness. Free love meant venereal disease. Drugs led to overdoses. When one young doctor in San Francisco's Haight Ashbury opened what he called a "free clinic," it was instantly mobbed because many young people couldn't – or wouldn't – go anywhere else. It was a revolutionary idea in health care that's still helping people today.

Cultural Life Flourishes in This 'Almost' Ghost Town Near Death Valley

From counter culture in San Francisco, to one on the edge of Death Valley: Darwin, in Inyo County. Chances are, people who live in the almost ghost town will see you coming way before you see them. Your tires will kick up five miles of dust along the single washboard road that drops into town from the highway. Writer and artist Kathy Goss emailed us a couple months back after hearing a story about Joshua Tree that took The California Report's L.A. bureau chief Steven Cuevas close to Darwin. Next time, she said, why not pay a visit? So, Steven did.

Not So Sentimental Journeys in New Albums From 2Mex and Frankie Rose

The California Report's Suzie Racho and our pop music critic Steve Hochman are here to talk about some of the latest releases from Golden State artists. Today, they've got music inspired by journeys: one physical, the other cosmic, from 2Mex and Frankie Rose.

The 5th Dementia: Group Brings Teens and Seniors Together to Make Music

When you think of the debilitating, painful trauma of Parkinson's and Alzheimer's, you probably don't think of people climbing onstage to belt out feel-good classics from the Great American Songbook. But then you're probably not thinking of the 5th Dementia. The LA group keeps folks with neurodegenerative disease in the moment by playing music of the past, with help from a few teenage musicians. Reporter Peter Gilstrap has more.

An Eclipse Made This Atheist Photographer Find God

For the first time in 40 years, people throughout North America can view a solar eclipse. And thousands of Californians are heading up to Oregon or to other parts of the country where the eclipse will be total. A team from the University of California, Berkeley and Google are producing a 90-minute film of the eclipse traveling all the way across the country. Among them, Mark Bender – who says viewing other eclipses has completely changed his life. KQED science reporter Lesley McClurg reports.

Parents, Get Ready for the Eclipse With a Tennis Ball and a Hula Hoop

If you can't take a last-minute road trip to Oregon or another prime spot in the path of the eclipse – we will get to see at least a partial eclipse here in California. And if you don't end up catching it, you can always re-enact it at home, thanks to the new children's book, "When the Sun Goes Dark". It's co-authored by Andrew Fraknoi, who's just retired as the chair of the astronomy department at Foothill College, in Northern California. The California Report's Sasha Khokha talked with him.

Strains of Puccini and Verdi Fill the Halls of Silicon Valley Tech Firms

Tech companies in Silicon Valley pull in all sorts of celebrities and theatrical acts for lunchtime entertainment. That gave the folks at Opera San José an idea. What if they took advantage of those captive audiences to make a pitch for opera? KQED arts reporter Rachael Myrow went to check out a performance.

After Trump's Travel Ban, She Took Off Her Hijab and Learned Self-Defense

The heightened visibility of white supremacist groups means a lot of people are feeling vulnerable. That includes Muslim Americans, already reeling from President Trump's proposed travel bans and an increase in hate crimes towards people perceived to be Muslim. That's all been weighing heavily on 22-year-old Marwa Abdelghani of Los Angeles. She reluctantly stopped wearing her headscarf after Trump took office, but she's also preparing to fight back. Pasha Zolfaghari brings us the final installment in our series, "At Risk in the Trump Era," produced in collaboration with student reporters from the USC Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism.

Published in LA, Banned in Iran: Ketab Books Fights Iran's Censorship

Southern California is home to the largest community of Iranians outside Iran, many of whom came as exiles after the Islamic revolution took power in 1979. Since then, a repressive regime has made Iran one of the world's most censored countries. In Los Angeles, Ketab Bookstore has been helping readers find ways around censorship for decades. Now the brick-and-mortar store is closing, but its owner vows to continue its work electronically. Reporter Valerie Hamilton has the story.

At 'Sound Maze' Exhibit in Napa, Everyone Is a Musician

Composer Paul Drescher fuses maker culture with music, with a collection of handmade instruments in an interactive exhibit called Sound Maze. Reporter Bianca Taylor went to the Napa Valley Museum to make some noise.

At the California Museum's New 'Unity Center,' Conversations Trump Confrontations

This week the California Museum in Sacramento is celebrating a new exhibit called the Unity Center, and it's opening the same weekend far-right rallies in Northern California are expected to draw white nationalists. That's an eerie coincidence, because the idea for the center began nearly 20 years ago when Sacramento was reeling from a string of hate crimes linked to white supremacists. Host Sasha Khokha checked out the exhibit.

Abandoned Bikes Get New Life After Burning Man Festival

It's that time of year again: Burning Man. The festival began in the '80s on a beach in San Francisco. But now, people gather in a desert outside Reno, Nevada. Thousands of "burners" will travel there from all over the world, and many will be bringing along bicycles. After it's over, most of the festival's structures and artworks will be ritually burned or packed up and taken away. But that's not always true of the bikes. Kerry Klein at Valley Public Radio has this story about how some Burning Man bikes end up almost 400 miles away, at a Central Valley middle school.

Family Ties Bind New Albums from Douyé and The Sons of the Soul Revivers

Each month, The California Report's Suzie Racho and our jazz critic Andrew Gilbert get together to talk new releases. They're here on this week's show with a couple of albums with strong family ties: Los Angeles singer Douyé's 'Daddy Said So' and 'Live at Rancho Nicasio' from The Sons of The Soul Revivers.

The Family Biz: San Jose's Kitazawa Seed Company

This week we continue our occasional series, Family Biz, about small, family-owned companies in California. The Kitazawa Seed Company was founded 100 years ago in San Jose by a Japanese immigrant who sold vegetable seeds to other Japanese Americans hungry for the tastes of home. The business almost went under several times. During World War II, the Kitazawas were locked up in an internment camp. Decades later, the company was saved yet again — by a different Japanese-American family. But the two families never really talked about what this company represents. That's what drove Maya Shiroyama, a 61-year-old from Oakland, to finally visit Tom Kitazawa, the last surviving son of the company's founder. Reporter Alyssa Jeong Perry was there for that meeting, and brings us this story about a historic company that defied the odds.

Pinning Down One Man's Button Obsession

We're going to end our show with a treasure hunt. It's not gold we're looking for, but rather a button. The kind that say stuff like "Vote for Kennedy" or "I Love California." While most people don't give these things a second thought, The California Report's Ryan Levi introduces us to a man who's spent the last 50 years seeking out this treasure.

Are These the Best Donuts in Southern California?

Gotham City may have Batman, Metropolis may have Superman, but Glendora, California has the Donut Man. People come to Jim Nakano for what many call the best donuts in Southern California. They line up at the window of his small shop that's open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, on one of the most historic roads in the country. Reporter Peter Gilstrap takes us there.

Heading to Napa? Take a Break From Wine and Check Out This Mill

Hidden among the picturesque landscape of vineyards and wineries sits a place that dates back to the time when California was still a part of Mexico. The California Report's Ryan Levi brings us the story.

33 Years After Her Death, An Eccentric Opera Singer's Garden Still Grows

On the Central Coast, there's an oasis you won't find on many tourist maps. It's called Lotusland, a collection of beautifully landscaped gardens, just south of Santa Barbara. As Diane Bock tells us, they reflect the eccentric, musical spirit of the woman who created them.

Finding Quiet, Solitude in Red Rock Canyon

Red Rock Canyon State Park sits at the Southernmost tip of the Eastern Sierra Nevada, but most people don't pull off Highway 14 long enough to experience it. And as Alice Daniel tells us, if you don't stop, pitch a tent at Red Rock and stay for awhile, you're missing out.

Welcome to Nancy's Airport Cafe, Where Regulars Fly in for Pie

Our last stop takes us to Glenn County, where Highway 5 cuts through the middle of rice country, between Sacramento and Redding. Right next to those rice fields, there's a restaurant that's popular with travelers, farmers, truckers...and pilots. Some fly in just for the food. For the series California Foodways, Lisa Morehouse drops in on another hidden gem: Nancy's Airport Cafe.

Oakland Residents Say Tent Encampments Threatening Neighborhoods

In many California cities, homelessness has reached a boiling point. There's not enough housing or space. And tent encampments are cropping up in neighborhoods where they're not always welcome. That's happening big time in Oakland, where complaints about homelessness have increased more than 700 percent over the last six years. KQED's Devin Katayama has been spending time with neighbors who have totally different perspectives on the issue.

Gentrification and Climate Change Meet at 'The North Pole'

Can you make gentrification and climate change funny? Those two very serious topics come together in the comedy web series, "The North Pole." The show revolves around a homegrown trio of best friends: Nina, Marcus and Benny, who find themselves an endangered species in a rapidly gentrifying city. The California Report's Sasha Khokha talks to Josh Healey, writer and producer of The North Pole, which premieres online September 12.

'Playing With Fire' Retrospective Pays Tribute to Artist Carlos Almaraz

Some call Mexican-born painter and muralist Carlos Almaraz the John Coltrane of Chicano art. Like Coltrane, his life was cut short before he was able to reach his full potential. He died when he was 48. Now the Los Angeles County Museum of Art is showcasing the first comprehensive retrospective of his work in decades. But as The California Report's LA Bureau Chief Steven Cuevas tells us, Almaraz's story begins worlds away from the galleries of major museums, in the streets of L.A.'s barrios.

What's Next for DACA Recipients?

California's home to more DACA recipients than any other state, and they're still absorbing news this week that President Trump plans to phase out the program that's given them temporary protection from deportation. We wanted to check back in with a "dreamer" we introduced you to last year, when she became the first undocumented PhD to graduate from UC Merced. She came here as a child from Mexico and worked her way through school picking watermelons, cleaning hotels, and selling produce at flea markets. We talked to her from Chicago, where she's doing post-doctoral research. Dulce Garcia is an immigration attorney in San Diego and like many of her clients, her future is also uncertain because of her immigration status. In an interview with KPBS's Marissa Cabrera, she says DACA changed her life and that she's not going back in the shadows.

For Isolated Trinity County Residents, One Man Is Their Food Lifeline

Trinity County is one of those places that doesn't get in the news too often, unless it's wildfire season like it is now. It's a remote, rural part of northern California that can be breathtakingly beautiful. And it's also one of the state's most food insecure places, where many people don't know where their next meal will come from. For the series California Foodways, Lisa Morehouse brings us this profile of one man who helps feed them.

Photographic Portraits Bring You Face to Face With the Vietnam War

It's been more than 40 years since the end of the Vietnam War. And a lot of the people who fought, died and escaped from that conflict are coming to the end of their years. As KQED's Rachael Myrow tells us, a Bay Area photographer is striving to give them the dignity and honor they've earned and a chance to feel remembered.

Bridging the Political Divide, One Dinner at a Time

Many of us are taught not to talk politics at the dinner table -- especially if your guests fall on different sides of the political spectrum. But as Bianca Taylor tells us, a new movement called 'Make America Dinner Again' breaks this rule, in a big way. It's the latest installment in our series "Start the Conversation."

2 Years After Destructive Valley Fire, Lake County Rebuilds and Readjusts

Between earthquakes, fires, and hurricanes, a lot of us have been thinking about what's important to us, what we'd fight to keep if we faced a natural disaster. Those questions aren't theoretical to people in Lake County who survived a massive wildfire two years ago. When the smoke cleared, the fire had burned up 70,000 acres, destroyed nearly thirteen hundred homes and killed four people. KQED reporter Sukey Lewis grew up in Lake County, and she went back to check in on how some of her friends are recovering.

War Is Not a Game: An 'Air Force Brat' On Growing Up with the Consequences of Vietnam

We've been bringing you stories of Californians whose lives have been impacted by the Vietnam War. We reached out to you, our listeners, and many of you responded with your memories. We hear from Sacramento resident Angela Shortt, whose father served in the U.S. Air Force during the war. She was eight years old when her family was sent to live on a military base in the Philippines in 1966.

A Surfer Reflects on Life's Waves

So, what does an 83 year old woman who surfs the cold waters of San Francisco's Ocean Beach have in common with a Buddhist monk hiking through the Himalayas? They're both people author Jaimal Yogis encounters as he scours the planet looking for the secrets to internal happiness, in his new book "All Our Waves Are Water." Yogis is a Bay Area surfer, journalist, and meditation teacher. He joins us to talk about his book, which chronicles his quest for the perfect wave, and for an internal life that can weather storms, lulls, and thrilling rides.

Meet the Heartbeat of the Oakland A's

At every home game, some of the Oakland A's most diehard baseball fans bang out beats -- different ones for each player, and each action on the field. You can find this informal drum corps in Section 149 in the bleachers of the Oakland Coliseum. They got their start nearly two decades ago, and they're likely to remain a fixture at A's home games. The team just announced its intention to build a downtown ballpark and remain rooted in Oakland. Tena Rubio spent a home game with some long-time drummers: Bryanne Aler-Nigas, Will MacNeil, Andy Cho, and The California Report's own Nina Thorsen, who drums for the A's when she's not making radio.

The Teen and Marine Who United to Resist the Vietnam War and Racism in the Military

Not all the battles were fought in Vietnam — enlisted men were also fighting a war against racism within the ranks. We'll hear how that revolt took hold at Camp Pendleton, and sparked an unlikely friendship. He was a young marine. She was the daughter of a farmworker. They met at a coffeehouse called 'The Green Machine.' It was one of many around the country where active duty GIs could get free coffee, listen to music, read underground newspapers and talk with peace activists. These coffeehouses were key in building the GI movement to end the war in Vietnam.

Remember When Camp Pendleton Was a Refugee Camp? These Vietnamese Sisters Do

In the Spring of 1975, the North Vietnamese took control of Saigon and the United States began frantically evacuating tens of thousands of South Vietnamese. Seemingly overnight, Camp Pendleton transformed into a makeshift refugee camp. That first wave included two teenage sisters, Evelyn and Jessica Kheo. They came from a well-to-do family in Saigon. At the camp they shared a tent with two other families, and used scratchy army blankets to keep warm. They hadn't been back to Pendleton in 42 years — and they let us tour the base with them.
