Later, Host Joe Moore is joined by Bill McEwen of The Fresno Bee to talk about schools and politics in Fresno. Also, Reporter Jeffrey Hess interviews Jennifer Jones with the US Forest Service about a new air tanker used to fight fires in California. We are also joined by Teresa Flores to talk about the Digital Mural Mapping Project.

We end the program with a segment on a Summer Soiree happening in Fresno August 14 and 15 at the Fresno Art Museum. There will be a collaborative performance by NOCO and the Fresno Philharmonic in the museum's lobby gallery. We are joined in studio by NOCO's Amy Querin and the Fresno Philharmonic's Executive Director Stephen Wilson.

8/18/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Education, Agriculture, Minorities, Cultural

This week on Valley Edition FM89's Ezra David Romero reports on how officials in the Fresno area prepping for possible flooding from a looming El Niño. Meteorologist and Fresno State Lecturer Sean Boyd explains what's conjuring up what could be an answer to California's drought.

Also on the program, we hear from UC Merced Chancellor Dorothy Leland about her plans for expansion for the university. We also share a story about how bats could help walnut growers control costs on their farms.

Ending the program we hear from Lar Yang with the Hmong Story 40 project about an event called "The History Behind The Hmong Refugee Exodus." The event will be held Saturday August 22 from 10:30 AM to 4 PM at the Fresno City College Theater.

8/25/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Minorities, Education, Technology, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition we start off the program with a segment about the Rough Fire. Mike Pruitt, a spokesman on the Rough Fire, and KVPR's Ezra David Romero join Host Joe Moore to talk about the blaze. We also hear the story of how 25 hikers were smoked out of the backcountry because of the fire.

Later we hear from KVPR Reporter Diana Aguilera. She brings a story on how Igbo Tribal members from Nigeria in the Fresno region are working to preserve their heritage.

FM89's Jeffrey Hess reports two stories for the show. In the first piece he visits the Central Valley town of Lindsay where grade levels have been abolished in schools and grading's been changed. In his second story he reports on the use of drones.

California's New Vaccine Bill Stokes Opposition

Governor Jerry Brown signed a controversial vaccine bill into law yesterday, it's one of the strictest in the nation. Under the new law, parents can no longer opt out of vaccinating their children for religious or personal reasons if they attend public or private schools. But opponents are already gearing up for a legal fight.

L.A. Apparel Manufacturers Object to Trade Deal

We've been hearing a lot about the controversial Transpacific Partnership, known as the TPP. That's the trade agreement President Obama is negotiating. The 12-nation trade deal would create a free trade zone stretching from Japan to Chile that includes 40 percent of world's economy. Because of the secretive nature of the negotiations it's unclear just how the deal will affect business here in California. But one group that's already calling foul is apparel manufacturers in Los Angeles. Reporter: Ben Bergman.

Electricity Prices Going Up? Consumers and Solar Companies Say No

Electric bills for millions of Californians could be going up, depending on what state regulators decide tomorrow. They're voting on a major overhaul of electricity prices. But consumer groups and solar companies are pushing back. Reporter: Lauren Sommer.

For Some California Cities, Drought and Budgets Mean No Fireworks This Fourth

We've been hearing a lot about how California is rebounding from the great Recession. But there are still large parts of the state that have yet to see a recovery. Case in point, small towns in the Central Valley that are canceling their fireworks shows this year to save money. Reporter: Sasha Khokha.

Big Name Latinos Enlisted Over Physician-Assisted Suicide Bill

Proponents of a bill to legalize physician assisted suicide in California have been enlisting some big names to their cause. Among them the union organizer Dolores Huerta and the actor Edward James Olmos. They're both Latino, which is no coincidence, because supporters of the bill hope they will help win the votes of a small band of Latino lawmakers. Reporter: April Dembosky.

Vintage Trailer Fans Keep Memories Rolling

Nothing says "road trip" like summer holidays, and more than 3.5 million Californians are expected to hit the highway this July 4th weekend. So we begin today with a bit of a trip back in time, to when pulling a sleek, state-of-the-art camper trailer behind your car was a sign that had made it into the middle class.

Davenport Debates Becoming a National Monument

As President Obama nears the end of his term, land conservationists are lining up with proposals to have their piece of the country designated a national monument. It's something the president can do by executive order, but it can also happen through an act of Congress. In California, two pieces of land have been proposed for monument status, Berryessa-Snow Mountain up north, and one along the Santa Cruz coast in Davenport where not everyone is sold on the idea. Reporter: Krista Almanzan, KAZU

California Foodways: Weekly USO Dinners Create Extended Family for Military

July 4th of course is a time when many friends and relatives come together to watch fireworks and have a BBQ. But members of the military are often deployed, or stationed far away from their extended families. For the series California Foodways, Lisa Morehouse went to San Diego to meet, and eat with, military families. Reporter: Lisa Morehouse

Burger Records Brings the Boogaloo to Oakland

Music is on the agenda this weekend in Oakland, where thousands of indie music fans will gather for the annual Burger Bugaloo. But the garage rock festival was conceived 400 miles away -- in a drab Orange County strip mall. That may seem an unlikely headquarters for a fast rising cultural tastemaker. But as the California Report's Los Angeles bureau chief Steven Cuevas reports, it fits right into the vision of the ambitious founders of Burger Records. Reporter: Steven Cuevas

Off-Beat Traditions Still Thrive at the Alameda County Fair

For many of us, it wouldn't be summer without a trip to the county fair. What's a fair without competitions? Fairs are fighting for our attention. Some are searching the Internet for the latest craft trends. But, some folks are bringing back off-beat traditions as Sam Harnett found out at the Alameda County Fair in Pleasanton. San Francisco Shooting Sparks National Debate Over Immigration Policy

Francisco Sanchez, the undocumented immigrant who's been charged in the fatal shooting of Kathryn Steinle in San Francisco last week is set to be arraigned today. Sanchez had been deported five times, but was protected from being turned over to federal immigration enforcement by San Francisco's "Sanctuary City" policy. The story has become a flashpoint for both Republicans and Democrats in the debate over immigration reform. Reporter: Queena Kim

National Backlash Against Sanctuary Cities Might Not Spark Policy Change

Francisco Sanchez is pleading "not guilty" to murder at his arraignment in San Francisco yesterday. He's accused of shooting 32-year-old Kathryn Steinle at a waterfront tourist spot in San Francisco. According to a source close to the investigation, the gun Sanchez used belonged to a federal agent. The incident has put sanctuary cities in the spotlight. Senator Dianne Feinstein called on San Francisco's mayor to start cooperating with federal immigration officials. But in California, it's not clear what, if any, policy changes will result from this shooting. Reporter: Rachael Myrow

Free Water in Fresno, If You Can Haul It Yourself

The drought is leaving California gardeners with hard choices: which trees and shrubs do you let die? But what if you could water them with a no-guilt, no-cost water source you could use anytime, without the water cops (or your neighbors) coming after you? In Fresno, that's now an option. Starting today, people can lug filtered water home from the sewage plant. Reporter: Sasha Khokha

Bill to Regulate Electronic Cigarettes Dropped in Assembly

State Senator Mark Leno, of San Francisco, announced that he was dropping his bill to regulate electronic cigarettes. He made the decision after an Assembly committee gutted the bill's main purpose, which was to designate e-cigarettes as a "tobacco" product. It would have also made giving minors e-cigarettes a misdemeanor. Opponents said the tobacco designation should come from the federal government. Reporter: Queena Kim

County Jail Construction Booms with Realignment Money

Realignment is a sweeping state initiative that was meant to achieve two goals. The first was to reduce the overcrowding at state prison by turning over the responsibility of non-violent offenders to local counties. The second was to invest some of the money used to jail people and put it toward social services that might end the cycle of incarceration. Marshall Project reporter Anat Rubin says counties have taken very different approaches to how they spend the realignment funds. Reporter: Anat Rubin

The Pier 14 Shooting: San Francisco's Sanctuary City Policy in the Spotlight

Everyone has opinions these days about San Francisco's policy toward undocumented immigrants, its status as a so-called "Sanctuary City." It started after Francisco Sanchez -- an immigrant here illegally from Mexico and released from the county jail in April -- was arrested and charged with murdering 32-year-old Kate Steinle. She was shot and killed with a gun as she walked along a waterfront pier with her father. Sanchez had been repeatedly deported and re-entered the U.S. illegally. The whole thing set off a firestorm with presidential candidate Donald Trump fueling the flames; then the mayor, sheriff, the feds and police all started pointing fingers at each other. So much of this debate -- it's become part of the presidential campaign now -- focuses on why this undocumented immigrant was released in San Francisco by the sheriff -- without notifying federal immigration authorities. Host Scott Shafer speaks about sanctuary cities and the complexities of immigration law with Kevin Johnson, Dean of UC Davis Law School.

Recycling Water: Farmers Get Creative

Many California farmers are in a tight spot this summer -- their normal water supplies just aren't there. Reservoirs are low and groundwater levels are dropping. It's all driving some farmers to get creative. As KQED Science reporter Lauren Sommer tells us, they're looking at buying water from cities - and not fresh water, but water that's already gone down the drain.

Is a 'Godzilla' El Nino Coming?

Help us El Nino, you're our only hope ... As California moves into the fourth consecutive year of the drought, many are hoping for relief from this weather pattern. Scott Shafer speaks with KQED science editor Craig Miller about the possibility of what experts are predicting could be an incredibly large El Nino hitting our state this winter.

The LAPD's Community Safety Partnership Program

This national conversation we're having about policing and communities of color -- it has many cities looking at new ways to build better relationships with the people they serve. L.A. is trying that with a program singled out this year by the President's Commission on 21st Century Policing. Reporter Frank Stoltze of KPCC in Los Angeles rode along with the sergeant who runs the LAPD's Community Safety Partnership program.

Sunken City: A Forbidden Playground

At the southernmost tip of Los Angeles is a post-apocalyptic wasteland in San Pedro -- the ruins of Sunken City. Even though it's closed to the public, Sunken City is a haven for graffiti artists and young people looking to party. They find a way to sneak in. Now, there's a move underfoot to open it during daylight hours. But locals are mixed on the idea. From KCRW in Los Angeles, Avishay Artsy has more.

Riverside Pushes Back Against State Water Restrictions

It's been three months since Gov. Jerry Brown ordered California communities to slash their water use by as much as 36 percent. Some cities, including Eureka and Arcata, have successfully appealed those mandatory reductions. The city of Riverside, east of Los Angeles, was ordered to cut its water use by 28 percent. But the city says that's unfair and has threatened to sue, saying it's already done its part to conserve water. Reporter: Tena Rubio

Fighting Food Waste at the Grocery Store

If you listen to public radio, research says you're more likely to be a curious traveler and life-long learner who cares about the environment. Maybe you're letting your lawn go brown, or trying to drive less. Some experts say there's another way you can be environmentally friendly: stop wasting food. From the farm to the fridge, it's estimated that 40 percent of what could be eaten just isn't, and that can impact climate change. Ruling Raises Questions About Long-Held Water Rights

As our historic drought continues, so do disputes over water. Earlier this year, the State Water Resources Board issued mandatory cutbacks statewide, including for those who've held water rights for over 100 years. But a recent ruling by a Sacramento Superior Court judge raises questions about how the state regulates and manages these rights. KQED Science reporter Lauren Sommer explains.

Can a Startup Transform Health Care in California's Lake County?

A group of tech entrepreneurs from Silicon Valley has taken on a huge task: trying to transform an entire community's health status in five places across the country, in just five years. Anna Deavere Smith Tackles School-to-Prison Pipeline With New Play

Schools are not always a welcoming place for some children of color. They're suspended, expelled and even arrested way out of proportion to their numbers in the student population, often setting them on a path to prison. Social justice groups call this the school-to-prison pipeline. As Cy Musiker explains, it's the focus of an unconventional play by Anna Deavere Smith, which she hopes will get people thinking about how to solve the problem. Reporter: Cy Musiker

Santa Rosa Theater Company Brings Bilingual Plays to Parks by Bike

As Fire Season Heats Up, Lawmakers Take on Problem of Drone Interference

Firefighters continue to battle the Wragg Fire, which is burning across two counties in Northern California near Lake Berryessa. Fire crews were able to stall the spread of the fire yesterday, but over 100 homes remain evacuated. Last week in Southern California, firefighting efforts were delayed by a flock of drones. Getting Drones Out of the Way of Firefighters

Over the last couple weeks, California wildfires have burned more than 10,000 acres. Fighting those fires is challenging enough, but now drones are getting in the way. CalFire reports that encounters between drones operated by hobbyists and firefighters' planes and helicopters are rising. That includes last week in the San Bernardino Mountains east of Los Angeles, when the North Fire jumped a freeway. This week, two state lawmakers introduced legislation to address the issue.

How a Vietnamese Pop Star Became a Sandwich Maven in Orange County

What do Jimmy Buffett, Jay-Z and Kenny Rogers have in common? They've all parlayed their fame to sell food, in restaurants and chains. But how many celebrity restaurateurs can actually cook? That's another story. For the series "California Foodways," Lisa Morehouse takes us to Orange County, where there's a banh mi sandwich shop run by Lynda Trang Dai, a Vietnamese pop star who's as comfortable behind the stove as she is behind the microphone. Dude, Where's My Earthquake Warning System?

One year ago today, in the pre-dawn hours of a Sunday morning, thousands of people were jounced out of bed when a magnitude 6.0 earthquake struck the Napa Valley. The shaking claimed at least one life, injured more than 200 and brought down whole sections of buildings in Napa and Vallejo. For years, Californians have been hoping for some kind of warning system that would provide even a few seconds to prepare. Japan has it. Mexico has it. But it will be a while yet before we have it. Today's show is devoted to the Monterey Bay, which was brought back from the brink of environmental disaster by federal and state protections. We examine this marine success story along with conservation efforts that keep it pristine, and the role of marine science -- both today and tomorrow. KQED's Scott Shafer and Lauren Sommer went to Monterey to co-host this special edition of The California Report.

Monterey Bay Aquarium: The Origin Story

Scott Shafer talks to one of the founders of the aquarium, Dr. Steve Webster, who brings us back to the beginning of the Monterey Bay Aquarium.

Protecting Marine Life, One DNA Sequence at a Time

Until recently, if you wanted to study the ocean you had to actually get into the ocean. But big advances in genetic testing have revolutionized efforts to protect marine life in the waters off California, where DNA sequencing allows biologists to study fish and whales without ever having seen them.

Sustainable Seafood: Ocean to Table

Scientists have come a long way in trying to prevent the collapse of fisheries that can spell economic disaster around the world. But consumers can play a role too. That's the idea behind the Monterey Bay Aquarium's nearly twenty-year-old Seafood Watch program that produces a guide to sustainable seafood. With news about the near extinction of Blue Fin Tuna, and dwindling populations of other fish like wild sturgeon and eel, the guide has helped seafood lovers make ocean friendly choices about what goes on their dinner plate.

Kelp, Climate and Catches

Lauren Sommer and Scott Shafer talk to Monterey Bay Aquarium naturalist and senior educator Dan Albro about kelp, climate change and the overfishing of sharks.

Monterey Bay's Future Marine Scientists

On California's Central Coast, some kids grow up surfing and exploring tide pools, while others rarely get to the ocean. A lot of this depends on their socioeconomic status or where their families live. But the Monterey Bay region is teeming with programs to inspire the next generation of marine scientists, no matter who they are or where they come from.

Deadly Skin Disease Threatens Endangered Kit Foxes in Bakersfield

The drought is taking a toll on California, not only the people who live here, but wild animals too. Take the endangered San Joaquin kit fox. Its numbers are declining in the arid Central Valley because there's not always enough prey to survive. But there's one urban population of these foxes that's finding plenty of food -- in Bakersfield. As Alice Daniel explains, these city-dwelling foxes are facing another threat to their survival.

Love in the Digital Age: Arranged Marriages? There's an App for That

For many of us, the thought of letting our parents choose who we marry seems unimaginable, even horrific. But in cultures where parents still play match maker, it makes perfect sense -- and these days, some are using modern technology to find their matches. As part of our special series "Love in the Digital Age," producers Rachael Myrow and Polly Stryker have this story about a matrimonial app.

Music Review: Los Lobos Still Offers Surprises on 'Gates of Gold'

When a band has been together for over 40 years, you might not expect a new album to offer any surprises. But The California Report's pop music critic Steve Hochman says that is not true of Los Lobos. He's got this review of the band's latest release, "Gates of Gold."

India Prime Minister Modi Speaks to Tech Leaders, Ex-Pats in Bay Area

A speech at San Jose's SAP Center concluded Prime Minister Narendra Modi's whirlwind trip to California. Modi spent the weekend in Silicon Valley meeting with the state's top political leaders and visiting the campuses of tech giants including Facebook and Google. Not all of the Bay Area's Indian community cheered Modi's visit; outside of Sunday's speech, about 500 demonstrators protested his stances on climate change, censorship and gay rights. Mexican Indigenous Immigrants? Dire Need for Medical Interpreters

Almost one in three farmworkers who pick California's fruits and vegetables speak an indigenous Mexican language, and barely understand Spanish. So when emergencies happen and field workers need medical care they often can't communicate with their doctors. Despite the need, it can be surprisingly tough for indigenous interpreters to make a living. Reporter: Jeremy Raff

Report: Prison Crowding and Crime Rates Down after Realignment

Four years ago state lawmakers made significant changes to our criminal justice system: shifting responsibility for thousands of non-violent, non-sexual and less serious felons from the state to the counties. People who would have gone to the big house served time in local jails. Opponents of the change feared a deadly crime wave. Now a new report finds violent crime in California dropped to historic lows, while the state prison population declined to levels not seen in a couple decades. Reporter: Marisa Lagos.

Pilot Program Uses Paramedics to Cut ER Overcrowding

If you've ever needed care at an emergency room, it's likely you had to wait, and then, wait some more. In ER's throughout California, typical wait times can be hours long. But new pilot programs starting in several cities around Southern California this month are hoping to both ease that overcrowding and improve patient satisfaction. Reporter: Stephanie O'Neill.

Federal Fund for Parks Faces Loss of Funding

Funding for the Land and Water Conservation Fund could expire at midnight tonight unless Congress votes to reauthorize it. The program has helped buy tens of thousands of acres for national parks like Sequoia and Pinnacles. The fund also repaired a pier in the San Francisco Bay and fixed a broken sewage system that closed down a beach near Santa Barbara. Lawmakers against the program say it no longer focuses on local projects and funds too many federal projects instead. Reporter: Deb Welsh.

Lack of Screening Puts African-Americans at Greater Risk of Colon Cancer

Colon cancer is the third leading cause of cancer-related deaths in the United States. But researchers in Los Angeles are finding that plenty of Californians at risk for the disease are still choosing not to get screened for it. African-Americans are especially vulnerable. The study found that African-Americans were 71% less likely to get screened than white Californians. Reporter: Avishay Artsy.
