This week on Valley Edition we talk with Assembly Republican Kristin Olsen, KVPR reporter Kerry Klein reports on turning waste water into usable water in Clovis, Bakersfield Californian reporter John Cox talks about the state ordering 11 Valley injection wells to halt work, Alex Karner chats about his latest column on sprawl in Fresno, and Joe Matthew's of Zocalo Public Square discusses why now is the time for Central California.

7/15/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Technology, Healthcare, Transportation, Agriculture, Health

This week on Valley Edition we take a look at innovation at Castle Air Force Base in Merced County, learn about the medical backlog in Fresno County, talk with writer James Fallow and Fresno County Supervisor Debbie Poochigian about California High Speed Rail, and speak with NPR's Dan Charles about Foster Farms.

7/22/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Agriculture, Poverty, Health, Environmental, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition we preview the 4th annual Fresno Food Expo with Amy Fuentes with the City of Fresno and Agnes Saghatelian president of Valley Lahvosh Baking Company. We'll also talk with Kiel Schmidt about a national project called the Food Commons that is turning to Fresno to try out a fresh solution to the problem of hunger and healthy eating. We'll also learn more about this weekend's Dark Sky Festival at Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks and find out how some winemakers on the Central Coast are trying to adapting to California's drought.

We also have a special in-studio performance from Fresno jazz, rock and Latin violinist Patrick Contreras and pianist Omar Nare, who are performing this weekend in Madera in a benefit for the Ronald McDonald House of Central California.

7/29/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Technology, Business, Agriculture, Politics, Environmental

This week on Valley Edition reporter Ezra David Romero takes a look at Fresno's tech boom, Grist writer Nathanael Johnson and Robert Rocha of Madera based Enzo Olive Oil chime in on whether olive oil will be the oil in the next California oil boom, and host Joe Moore speaks with Marshall Tuck who is running for state superintendent of public instruction.

Also on the program we talk about the phenomenon called #DroughtShaming used on social media to point out the ill use of water. Fresno citizen Jefferson Beavers, Mark Standriff with the City of Fresno and Felicia Marcus with the State Water resources board join the conversation

8/5/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Business, Crime, Politics, Agriculture

This week on Valley Edition we take a look at the Rim Fire one year later. KVPR reporter Diana Aguilera reports on the fire and the investigation around who started the blaze. Peggy Mosley, the owner of the historic Groveland Hotel, who kept her hotel open during the Rim Fire joins host Joe Moore for a talk about how volatile the region is to fire.

Also on the program GOP gubernatorial candidate Neel Kashkari explains why he chose to be homeless in Fresno for a week. Ending the program we get a sneak peek into the 2014 Fig Festival.

8/12/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Agriculture, Arts & Entertainment, Sports

This week on Valley Edition we take a look into our vault to three of what we consider the best segments on the program over the last year or so. We start the show off by returning to a conversation with the Masumoto family - Marcy, Nikiko and David Mas - about their book 'The Perfect Peach.' Then we turn to a chat with Gerald Haslam who recalls the tragic story of Bakersfield athlete Leon Patterson with his book "Leon Patterson: A California Story."

Ending the program Fresno jazz musician Karen Marguth serenades us with her vocal stylings from her latest album "A Way With Words."

8/19/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Agriculture, Cultural, Arts

This week on Valley Edition we talk about the Junction Fire with Reporter Ezra David Romero who was on the ground earlier this week. Also on the program our news team visits the community of Groveland near where the Rim Fire hit and talks to locals about how the town is recovering. Later in the program host Joe Moore speaks with Joe Matthews of Zocalo Public Square about his column "If California Cows Could Talk."

Ending the show Moore speaks with Peterangelo Vallis about the Fresno Greek Fest held Aug 22 to 24.

8/26/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Politics, Government, Homelessness, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition we talk with Assemblyman Henry T. Perea on why he thinks California's cap and trade system will hurt the Valley. We also speak with Visalia Times Delta Editor Melinda Morales about homelessness in Visalia and why she thinks Peter Frampton canceled a recent show in one of the city's oldest and most controversial parks.

Ending the program we speak with author Cheryl Anne Stapp on her book The Stagecoach in Northern California: Rough Rides, Gold Camps & Daring Drivers.

9/2/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Transportation, Business, Science, Technology

This week on Valley Edition we explore Fresno's Fulton Mall fifty years after its opening. FM89's Joe Moore takes a look at how the once innovative and bustling outdoor mall transformed over the years. The documentary style piece is filled with the memories of those who shopped there, the minds behind the mall and those who still visit the mall today.

Also on the program we talk about the 2014-15 season of Central Valley Café Scientifique, a weekly dinner and science discussion at Peeves Public House in Downtown Fresno. Fresno State professors Dr. Madhusudan Katti and Dr. David Lent join the conversation.

9/9/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Law Enforcement, Health, Education, Politics, Energy, Business, Environmental

This week of Valley Edition FM89 reporter Ezra David Romero takes a look at how military grade vehicles are used by one local police force. Reporter Diana Aguilera reports on one student's experience at the first pharmacy school in Central California. Also on the program, Fresno Bee Political Reporter John Ellis talks local political races and Bakersfield California Reporter John Cox shares a bit of his reporting on a possible oil refinery expansion in Kern County.

Ending the program, FM89 reporter Ezra David Romero interviews a hiker who was one of the 85 people airlifted off Half Dome Sunday in Yosemite National Park when the fire got out of hand.

9/16/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Housing, Government, Politics, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition reporter Ezra David Romero takes a look at an alternative way for homeowners whose private wells have gone dry that doesn't include digging a new well. Joel Nelson, with California Citrus Mutual, talks about groundwater regulations with host Joe Moore. Also on the program KVPR Reporter Diana Aguilera talks to Moore about her time spent on the Courtney Fire that devastated the mountain community of Bass Lake. State Senator Alex Padilla speaks with Moore about his idea to ban plastic bags used at the cashier across the Golden State.

Also on the show, Moore speaks with William J. Sanders about the documentary called Billy Mize and The Bakersfield Sound. Ending Valley Edition, Moore talks with Augie Blancas about the 25th Annual Fresno Reel Pride Gay and Lesbian Film Festival that takes place September 17-21.

9/23/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Government, Sports, Environmental, Arts & Entertainment

In this week's program we'll talk about a water shortage that has left a whole Valley community waterless. FM89 reporter Diana Aguilera tells the story of Measure Z and the Fresno Chaffee Zoo.

We'll also discuss the future of the Fresno Grizzlies. Last week the team lost its longtime partnership with the San Francisco Giants, and talk of a possible sale and new lease is swirling around city hall. We'll talk to Grizzlies Vice President Derek Franks, Grizzlies Media Relations Coordinator Ryan Young and Marek Warszawski of the Fresno Bee about whether professional baseball can survive in Chukchansi Park, and whether taxpayers will be left holding the ball. Also talking baseball Bakersfield Sports Editor Zachary Ewing joins conversation about a similar situation with the Bakersfield Blaze.

We'll also get a preview of Fresno's F.U.S.E. Festival, which brings dozens of bands together in downtown Fresno for a celebration of local rock. And we'll get a look at the new season of the Fresno Philharmonic.

9/30/14 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Politics, Housing, Environmental, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition we take a look at a Fresno City Council race on the November ballot. VE Host Joe Moore speaks with both Cary Catalano and Esmeralda Soria. Also on the program, Moore speaks with Fresno State Professor Janine Nkosi about Faith In Community's "blight to light" campaign with a focus on getting boarded up homes filled cleaned up and filled with occupants.

Ending the program Moore and KVPR reporter and producer Ezra David Romero talk about the station's involvement with ArtHop in Downtown Fresno for the month of October. This month CMAC, Community Media Access Collaborative, and Valley Public Radio partner for an exhibit that brings the station's blog Voices of the Drought to life

NASA Halts Launch of Satellite Monitoring Carbon Dioxide for Second Time

For the second time, NASA has had to scrub an attempt to put a new satellite into space, to measure carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and on the Earth's surface. KQED Science Editor Craig Miller traveled to Vandenberg Air Force Base on the central coast, and he woke up early - only to be disappointed. He joins us now to talk about what's going on. Reporter: Craig Miller.

Hobby Lobby Ruling Unlikely to Affect California Women

Most women in California won't be affected by the US Supreme Court's decision on the Affordable Care Act's requirement that companies provide contraception coverage to their employees. The Court ruled some for-profit companies can opt out, if they object on religious grounds. But it's not so easy in California. Reporter: April Dembosky.

University of California Unveils Global Food Initiative

The University of California today throws its weight behind an ambitious new effort to improve global nutrition. As an example of what kinds of issues will be targeted by the effort, UC President Janet Napolitano cited the twin problems of malnutrition and obesity. Reporter: Scott Shafer.

Coming Soon to LA: A Farmers Market for Pot

Californians love their farmers markets and the concept of farm-to-table is all the rage. A cannabis collective in Los Angeles hopes to capitalize on this enthusiasm, with the city's first ever farmers market for medical marijuana this weekend. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

Quest for Fireworks Tax Fizzles Out

It's nearly July 4th, so time to figure out whether you're going to watch fireworks or in some places, set them off yourself. Of course, there are always some folks who can't seem to make do with what's legal. For those folks, police, ambulance, and fire departments are staffing up this weekend. A trip to the emergency room is an expensive business, and so, as it happens, is disposing of seized illegal fireworks. Reporter: Scott Detrow.

Searching for a Nursing Home Where Korean Can Be Heard

Finding a nursing home for a loved one can be a daunting task, especially if she doesn't speak English. Teri Lim and her family immigrated to Los Angeles from Korea. Then, about two years ago, her mother had a stroke. Lim explains what happened next, as part of our ongoing community health series Vital Signs. Reporter: Susan Valot.

SoCal Town Becomes Flashpoint of Immigration Crisis

Murrieta, north of San Diego, has become an unexpected flashpoint over illegal immigration. Earlier this week, protesters in Murrieta blocked a convoy of buses carrying immigrants from overcrowded facilities in south

Texas to a U.S. border office here. But more immigrants are on their way. And at a town hall meeting Wednesday, hundreds of residents vowed to keep pushing them back. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

ER Doctor's New Film Is Love Letter to His Work

For all the debate over health care in America, it's relatively rare to hear from doctors on the front lines, and even more rare to hear from young doctors about a field they've recently chosen to devote their lives to. Code Black is a documentary produced by a resident at L.A. County's storied USC Medical Center, Dr. Ryan McGarry. The film is playing in select theaters. Reporter: Rachael Myrow

Asilomar State Park Celebrates 100 Years

Asilomar State Park on the Monterey Peninsula is celebrating its 100th anniversary -- and the park's history is a rich one. When this forested bluff was donated to the YWCA a century ago, America was industrializing rapidly. The Bay Area Y wanted a West Coast camp where women could learn both work and leadership skills. In this natural setting, the YWCA empowered women and promoted racial equality. President John F. Kennedy, anthropologist Margaret Mead and civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. all spoke here. Reporter: Leslie David

Fresno Community Garden a Sanctuary for Hmong Refugee

Cha Deng Vang fled Laos for the United States nearly 30 years ago after fighting with U.S.-backed forces during the Vietnam War. As part of our ongoing community health series "Vital Signs," we find out how Vang finds peace of mind in a community garden for Hmong refugees in Fresno. Reporter: Sasha Khokha

The Giving State: A Real-Life Rosie the Riveter Shares Her Story

As part of "The Giving State," our occasional series on volunteers in California, we meet a woman who used to work in the Kaiser Shipyards in Richmond during World War II. She's returned to share her story with visitors as a "Rosie Docent." Reporter: Isabel Angell

Nitt Witt Ridge: The Poor Man's Hearst Castle

Today, we hit the road to uncover a few of California's hidden gems. On the central coast in the town of Cambria, just a few miles from San Simeon, there's a place called Nitt Witt Ridge. Some locals call it "the poor man's Hearst Castle," but it's every bit as fascinating. We stop by to discover this little-known California historical landmark, and the man who brought it to life. Reporter: Diane Bock

Burnt Almond Cake, a San Jose Specialty, Remains a Mystery

If you grew up in San Jose, or even nearby, you've probably eaten a slice of burnt almond cake at a birthday or a graduation party. It's not that people don't eat this fluffy delight elsewhere, but in San Jose it's a local specialty. Reporter: Rachael Myrow

LAPD Museum Houses History of City's Dark Side

On one end of York Blvd. in the trendy, northeast Los Angeles neighborhood of Highland Park, you'll find record stores, cafes and hipster boutiques. On the other end you'll find the Los Angeles Police Museum. This collection of all things LAPD lives in the city's last surviving 1920s station house -- and it offers a visceral glimpse into the city's cops and crooks, real and imagined. Reporter: Peter Gilstrap

San Francisco Museum Archives Social Activism

We visit a hidden gem where the past is passed along, in the hopes of shaping a better future. The Freedom Archives in San Francisco's Mission District collects images and words of social activists from vinyl, tape and film, and then they restore, digitize and preserve them. Reporter: Theresa Adams

L.A.'s Bradbury Building Still Dazzles Visitors, Filmmakers

Downtown Los Angeles, there's a building many of us first saw in the classic 1982 sci-fi film "Blade Runner." Director Ridley Scott filled The Bradbury Building with neon and smoke. It's been a popular filming location for half a century, and it remains a must-see stop for tourists and architecture buffs. Reporter: Avishay Artsy

Oakland's Chapel of the Chimes a Place for Both Living and Dead

It's not unusual for cemeteries to attract tourists. They flock to Pere-Lachaise in Paris to see the tombs of Jim Morrison and Oscar Wilde. Forest Lawn in Glendale is the final resting place for entertainment luminaries like Humphrey Bogart and Michael Jackson. And a similar but much less well-known attraction sits at the end of a busy street in Oakland, past boutiques and up-scale coffee joints. We pay a visit to the Chapel of the Chimes columbarium. Reporter: Casey Miner

An African Wildlife Preserve - in Sonoma County

For the last stop on our hidden gems tour, we head to Sonoma County. The region is best-known for its wine, especially reds. But it's also home to Safari West, a wildlife preserve with about 800 exotic African animals. We sent our adventure-seeking interns Nancy DeVille and Angela Rowell to Santa Rosa for a journey into the wild.

Recount Begins in State Controller's Race

A recount of last month's primary election results for state controller begins Monday. Former Assembly Speaker John Perez, who placed third, asked for the recount on Sunday, and said he'd pay for it himself. Perez trails fellow Democrat Betty Yee by 481 votes. Perez argued to the secretary of state that "never in California history has the vote between two candidates for statewide office been so narrow." Reporter: John Myers

Sex Offender Registry Reform Aims to Parse for Future Risk

California is one of only four states that require sex offenders to register for life. Now, the state board overseeing the registry is once again pushing to overhaul the system. The board wants to make it easier to spot sex offenders at high risk of re-offending. But making the change won't be easy. Reporter: Tara Siler

Community Organizations Provide Aid to Busloads of Undocumented Immigrants

Protestors in Murrieta upset with the federal government's diversion of undocumented immigrants for processing there appear to have stopped the program, for now. ICE had been sending about 300 immigrants a week to Murrieta, to relieve pressure on border stations in the wake of a recent surge. While it's not clear what happens next, the pause provides some relief for locals who've been helping the area absorb the influx. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

State Lawmakers Try to Avoid 'Tunnel' Vision in Water Bond Negotiations

State lawmakers have a pretty daunting task ahead of them as they begin a summer recess this week: crafting a multi-billion dollar water bond that wins bipartisan support. The bond wouldn't directly fund Governor Brown's proposal to build tunnels through the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. Reporter: Scott Detrow.

State Proposes Fines to Crack Down on Water Wasters

Despite the fact we're in the thick of the worst drought since the 1970's, the state has been relying on people to cut back water use voluntarily. Now the Water Resources Control Board is proposing fines of up to $500 on people who water their lawn, sidewalks, or cars too often, or with hoses that can't shut off at the nozzle. Reporter: Scott Detrow.

McCourt Family Held Responsible in Bryan Stow Civil Trial Judgment

Three years ago, San Francisco Giants fan Bryan Stow was brutally beaten in the parking lot outside a Dodgers game. What followed was permanent brain damage, a criminal judgment against the two men who beat him, and now a civil judgment against those men and the group that owned the Dodgers and their stadium at that time. Reporter: Shirley Jahad.

Price Check: Shining Light on California's Health Costs

You can look up the price of pretty much everything online: cars, hotels, summer camps, but not health care. So KQED and sister station KPCC in Los Angeles decided to join forces with Clearhealthcosts.com, a health cost transparency advocate, to collect pricing data from you, the California consumer. The results so far have been quite illuminating. Lisa Aliferis of KQED's State of Health blog joins us to share the results. Reporter: Rachael Myrow.

Recount in Controller's Race Takes State Into Uncharted Territory

Summer is usually a quiet time for local election officials. But that's not the case this year in a few California counties where votes will soon be recounted in the statewide controller's race. Fresno's Republican Mayor Ashley Swearingen easily came in first. But out of 4 million ballots cast, just 481 votes separate number-two finisher Betty Yee from fellow Democrat John Perez, who came in third. Perez is demanding a recount in 15 counties.

Parents of Unaccompanied Children Pin Hopes on a False Rumor

As unaccompanied children arrive at the U.S.-Mexico border from Central America, many seek to reunite with family in Southern California. They -- and immigrant advocates -- point to escalating violence and poverty in their home countries as the main thing driving them north. But there's also been a fair amount of miscommunication about U.S. policies. Reporter: Leslie Berestein Rojas.

As Water Prices Soar, Some Profit From State's Drought

The drought is putting a lot of California's farmers in crisis this year. But for those who have water, it can be a windfall. Prices for water are soaring, and some growers are pumping out their groundwater and selling it. Some call it "groundwater mining" -- and fights are breaking out over concerns that it might threaten California's already stressed aquifers. Reporter: Lauren Sommer.

Creating Patrons of the Arts Through Crowdfunding

Artists who publish their work on the Internet might hit it big and find thousands, even millions of fans there. But in a world where online content has become virtually free, all those supporters might not produce a penny for the artist. We find out how a new San Francisco company is helping creative people turn all that art lovers' affection into cash. Reporter: Grace Rubenstein.

California Songs: The Washboard Three's 'Oakland'

Tony Bennett and Jeanette MacDonald made sure San Francisco was enshrined in popular music. But Oakland has always struggled a bit in the shadow of its shinier, richer neighbor across the Bay. Forty years ago, Bay Area DJ Jim Lange challenged listeners to give Oakland a song that paid tribute to its beauty and quirk. The winning entry, by The Goodtime Washboard 3, became an uplifting, unofficial anthem that some locals still cherish. We talk with the group's washtub bass player Bruce Bratton about their song, "Oakland." Reporter: Kate Hunts.

Fresno Teacher Belongs to a Long Line of Central Valley Poets

Central Valley poet Lee Herrick reads from his poem "My California." Herrick left the San Francisco Bay Area and moved to the San Joaquin Valley 20 years ago to write and teach. While you might not think of this region as fertile ground for writers -- it is. In fact the Central Valley has produced a national poet laureate, a state poet laureate and multiple winners of the National Book Award. Herrick says he chose to live in Fresno because of its diversity -- it's a city where you can hear 90 different languages spoken -- and because of its literary scene. Reporter: Jefferson Beavers

Communal Project Finds Different Way to Treat Fresno's Homeless

Fresno is surrounded by farms. But it's also California's fifth-largest city -- and it struggles with urban problems like homelessness. The city lost a class action lawsuit after it destroyed homeless people's belongings, including medicine and family mementos. Activists have criticized city leaders for not doing more to provide housing for people living on the streets. We find out how a few dedicated people are tackling the issue by trying out a bold idea. Drought May Be Driving Increase in West Nile 311 people have been infected with West Nile virus in California this year. That's more than double the number of cases from the same time last year, and public health officials say the drought may be a factor. Reporter: April Dembosky.

Lancaster Grapples with LA County Over How to Serve Homeless Population

We recently aired a story on this program about a push to close the only commuter train station that connects the desert city of Lancaster to L.A. Lancaster officials claim it's the last stop for scores of homeless people hoping to take advantage of their city's limited public services. But local homeless service providers say the real problem is a gap in county funding for those services and what the city aims to do about it. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

New Plan Outlines Clean Energy Future of State Deserts

The wraps are about to come off a major new plan to build out renewable energy in California's deserts, while protecting the environment. The barren landscape has become a battleground for competing interests. Reporter: Lindsey Hoshaw.

Small Tribe Carries on Fight Against Shasta Lake Expansion

Late this fall the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation is scheduled to finish years of work on a proposal to make Shasta Dam higher. Adding height to the 70-year-old dam would also enlarge Shasta Lake, the state's biggest reservoir. Farm water agencies and urban water districts around the state like the idea. They say it could give them a more reliable supply. But the Winnemem Wintu tribe, not even recognized by the federal government, has made a dramatic vow to stop the project. Reporter: Dan Brekke.

Strong Support for Jerry Brown and Water Bond in New PPIC Poll

Governor Jerry Brown is maintaining his large lead in the race for governor. The latest Public Policy Institute of California poll gives the Democrat a 21-point lead over Republican challenger Neel Kashkari. 6 in 10 voters showed support for Proposition 1, a $7.5 billion package of water measures. Reporter: Craig Miller.

Gov. Brown Champions State's Efforts to Combat Climate Change at the UN

California's efforts combating climate change were showcased at the United Nations Tuesday with Governor Jerry Brown using his speech to take something of a victory lap. He touted the state as a leader on efforts to fight climate-change while delivering remarks at the UN climate summit. Reporter: Scott Detrow.

LA City Council to Vote on Higher Minimum Wage for Hotel Workers

Tonight, the L.A. city council will vote on whether to boost the minimum wage for hotel workers. If approved, the lowest paid hotel employees will earn more than $15 an hour. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

University of California Promotes Startups with New VC Fund

The University of California announced recently that it will create a new investment fund--called UC Ventures. The venture capital entity will have $250 million of university money to invest in UC start-ups. The investment model is unprecedented for UC, and is raising some questions. Reporter: Sam Harnett.

LA City Council Approves Minimum Wage Boost for Hotel Workers

The Los Angeles city council yesterday voted in favor of boosting the minimum wage for hotel workers to just over $15 an hour. That's opposition from business leaders who say the wage hike could lead to layoffs and higher room rates. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

Study Finds Global Warming Lighten Future Snowpacks

A first time study by the Department of the Interior finds California mountains will eventually see less snow as a result of global warming, which will take a toll on state water supplies. Reporter: Kitty Felde.

Bears Descend into Bakersfield at Historic Rate; Is Drought to Blame?

The number of black bear sightings in Kern County is off the charts this year. At least six bears have entered residential areas in Bakersfield over the past two weeks. The California Department of Fish and Wildlife has responded to ten to twenty times the number of bear calls from a year ago. When the calls come in, biologist Vicki Monroe gets on the road to check out the situation. We caught up with her after what she called a crazy day. Reporter: Penny Nelson.

VA Seeks More Medical Professionals

Across the U.S., the country could be facing a shortfall of as many as 28,000 medical staff at the Department of Veterans Affairs. The nation's new Secretary of Veterans Affairs, Robert McDonald, was in San Francisco as part of his effort to recruit more medical professionals. Reporter: Sara Hossani.

Hacking for Democracy: Code for America Summit

Roughly 800 people gathered in San Francisco this week for the 4th annual Code for America summit. The non-profit embeds coders, designers and other techies into government offices and agencies around the country to help aging bureaucratic infrastructure serve citizens better. A Migrant Student Struggles to Navigate High School

The number of unaccompanied minors crossing the Mexican border has fallen off dramatically since the summer. But tens of thousands of children are still here in the US, thousands here in California, waiting in legal limbo. Lawmakers across the state are pushing for money to fund legal support for Central American kids, placed by immigration authorities in 14 counties. We begin today's show with a second visit to a family living this story in San Mateo County, south of San Francisco. Teenager Jennifer Cruz fled gang violence in El Salvador for a new life with her older sister. While she waits for the resolution of her legal case, she's been struggling to fit in at the local high school. Her sister Yesenia — who asked us not to use her last name — has been struggling to pay the bills. Reporter: Ana Tintocalis

Ai Weiwei Exhibit Opens This Weekend on Alcatraz Island

Some in the art world are calling it the hottest ticket of the year. "@Large" on Alcatraz Island debuts this weekend. Ai Weiwei is a political artist the Chinese government won't allow to leave the country, not even to see his new exhibit — which explores freedom and confinement. Ai Weiwei makes headlines whatever he does, and "@Large" is no exception. Reporter: Mina Kim

Pop Music Review: Lucinda Williams' 'Down Where the Spirit Meets the Bone'

Lucinda Williams' new album, Down Where the Spirit Meets the Bone, comes out next week. Williams has enjoyed a long, rich career, with 11 albums and a lot of well-loved songs, like Sweet Old World. She could easily till the old ground and call it a day. But this new album is a career-defining work. Reporter: Steve Hochman

California Foodways: The Story Behind Stanislaus County's Top Crop

For today's installment in the series California Foodways, reporter Lisa Morehouse drops down into the heart of Central California, to talk about land, religion and nuts. Almonds are the top crop in Stanislaus County, bringing in a billion plus dollars in 2013. Walnuts came in third. Nuts aren't just an economic powerhouse in this region. They're also key to the county's past ... and future.

Proposition 46: A Complicated Solution Arising from Tragedy

Vote-by-mail ballots for the November election are going out today in some counties. One complicated measure voters will have to decide is Proposition 46. The initiative's backers say it's all about patient safety, but it's a confusing measure with three distinct parts. In the first of a two-part look at Proposition 46, we learn how it was inspired by a tragic accident over a decade ago. Reporter: April Dembosky

Final Day for Governor Brown to Sign or Veto Bills

Tonight is the deadline for Governor Jerry Brown to sign or veto bills passed by the legislature. One of the more notable measures in the governor's to-do pile would enact a statewide ban on single-use plastic grocery bags. At a Gubernatorial debate earlier this month, the Governor hinted at his decision. Reporter: Julie Small.

Bill Increasing Fines Joins Package of Assisted Living Reforms

On Monday, Governor Jerry Brown signed a bill that boosts the fines California can impose on assisted living facilities for the elderly. Up until now the top fine regulators could levy for violations was a mere $150. Now they'll be able to impose up to $15,000. The Governor enacted the change as part of a package of other bills he signed this weekend that aim to improve care for seniors at the 7,500 assisted living facilities in California. Reporter: Mina Kim.

Proposition 46 Doctor Drug Testing: Safety Provision or Political Sweetener?

The political fight around the patient-safety initiative has been most intense over its plan to require random drug testing of doctors. That helps explain why Prop 46 is this fall's most expensive campaign. Reporter: April Dembosky.
