January 1, 2015 – March 31, 2015 (Q1)
Program: KVPR/KPRX's Valley Edition
Host: Joe Moore

1/6/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Politics, Agriculture, Energy, Economy, Arts

This week on Valley Edition we look ahead to what 2015 will hold for the San Joaquin Valley in a variety of areas from the oil industry to the arts. We start with a look at the political landscape in 2015 by talking with Fresno State political science professor Thomas Holyoke.

For a preview of what the local agriculture industry has in store we talk with Ryan Jacobsen of the Fresno County Farm Bureau and Tricia Stever Blattler of the Tulare County Farm Bureau.

The valley's other big industry is energy and John Cox with the Bakersfield Californian joins us to talk about what the dramatic drop in oil prices might mean for the economy of Kern County. Finally, we close our show with a look at the state of the arts in 2015 with David Gordon from the Kern Arts Council of Kern and Lilia Chavez of the Fresno Arts Council.

1/13/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Government, Education, Crime & Punishment, Transportation

This week on Valley Edition we delve into the topic of free community college with College of the Sequoias' President Stan Carrizosa and Reedley College's President Sandra Caldwell.

Also on the program we speak with Fresno County Sheriff Margaret Mims about crime in the region in 2014 and talk about the future of the department.

Ending the program, we're joined by Josh Stephens with the California Planning Development Report to talk about his take on California High Speed Rail.

1/20/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Education, Labor, Transportation, Technology

This week on Valley Edition we speak with California Air Resources Board Chairmen Mary Nichols about air quality in the region and Assembly Bill 32, the California Global Warming Solutions Act of 2006.

Also on the program we speak with The Fresno Bee's Education Reporter Hannah Furfaro about a shortage among substitute teachers in Fresno Unified.

Ending the program we speak with Stuart Witt of the Mojave Air and Space Port and Leonard David with Space.com about the future of Virgin Galactic after the SpaceShipTwo tragedy of 2014.

1/27/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Parks & Recreation, Children, Poverty, Healthcare, Health, Arts

This week on Valley Edition, we look at the future of California's state parks system. After years of budget cuts and closures, how should this treasured part of the Golden State reinvent itself? We hear a special report. We'll also learn more about a new program called Talking Is Teaching that focuses on early childhood education, and something called the "word gap." That's the estimated 30 million fewer words that children from lower income families hear compared to those from upper income families.

Talking Is Teaching segment guests:

- Linda Gleason of the The Children's Movement
- Kendra Rogers – the Director of Community Investment for Granville Homes, formerly of First Five Fresno County
- Darius Assemi, President of Granville Homes

We also hear the reports on the world of health care, including news about a local hospital that has announced a new medical education partnership for pediatric care, and a new "Death with Dignity" bill in the state legislature.

We close the show with a preview of a Zocalo Public Square event taking place Wednesday at the Metro Galleries titled "What Does Bakersfield Sound Like Today?" We talk about the past, present and future of The Bakersfield Sound - the unique brand of country music that thrived in Kern County in the 50's, 60's and 70's with guest Robert Price, editor of the Bakersfield Californian.

2/3/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Health, Environmental, Parks & Recreation, Arts

This week on Valley Edition we talk about the ongoing measles scare with Dr. Dee Lacy of Kaiser Permanente's medical center in Fresno and Sara Bosse from the Fresno County Department of Public Health. Later we speak with Bryant Jurgens, with the USGS, about a study showing high levels of uranium in Valley private wells.

We also speak with Scott Gediman, with Yosemite National Park, about a rare Sierra Nevada red fox sighting. Ending the program we speak Vicki Cruz with the Bakersfield Museum of Art about upcoming exhibits.

2/10/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Agriculture, Technology, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition reporter Ezra David Romero visits the World Ag Expo in Tulare, Calif. We are also joined by Valley farmer Paul Betancourt who talks about the state of agriculture in the region. Later in the program VE host Joe Moore interviews Niki Caro, the director of the upcoming film McFarland, USA, on how she found inspiration in the region for the film. We end the program with a conversation between Moore and Fresno Grand Opera General Director Matthew Buckman on changes coming to the group.

2/17/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Politics, Agriculture, Environmental, Minorities, Education

This week on Valley Edition we speak with Fresno State Political Science Professor Jeff Cummins about California politics and his new book "Boom and Bust: The Politics of the California Budget."

Also on the program Valley Edition Host Joe Moore remembers the lives of Jerry Tarkanian and Philip Levine. Ending the show we talk about Allensworth, the African American community in southeastern Tulare County that was established in 1908. Today, it is known as Colonel Allensworth State Historic Park. George Finley, the former principal of Allensworth School, chats with Moore about the town. Porterville College's Cultural Historical Awareness Program (C.H.A.P.) will host a presentation on the town Feb. 18 with a special Black History Month presentation of "Allensworth: History and Personal Recollections" from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the PC Theater.

2/24/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Arts, Minorities, Agriculture, Business, Environmental, Government

This week on Valley Edition reporter Jennifer Burger attends the Central Valley opening of the feature film McFarland, USA. Reporter Ezra David Romero goes on a bus tour with 40 East Asian farmers to the Bay to discover new markets.

Later in the program, Tommy Esqueda, public utilities director for the City of Fresno, talks about the city's water project that'll raise water rates.

Ending the program, Matt Black, Time Magazine's Instagram photographer of the years, opens up about his coverage of the drought.

3/3/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Housing, Homelessness, Technology, Education, Violence, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition FM89's Diana Aguilera reports on one Fresno group's vision to tackle homelessness by creating eco-friendly shelters. John Lindt, with Sierra2theSea.net, joins the program for a conversation about the possibility of a new Central California town called Quay Valley that may have a hyper loop.

Fresno Unified Superintendent Katie Russell also joins the program to talk about troubles and violence at Fort Miller Middle School. Later in the program, Ashley Sparks and Peter Howard with Cornerstone Theater talk about a play, "California: The Tempest," launching in Fowler this week.

Ending the program we talk about Fresno's own fringe festival, The Rogue Festival. The festival's producer Heather Parish joins the show with Jaguar Bennett, who performs "How to Be Wicked" at the festival. The Rogue Festival runs February 26 to March 7, 2015.

3/10/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Health, Parks & Recreation, Environmental, Arts

This week on Valley Edition Mark Keppler, the executive director of the Maddy Institute, talks about the state of trails in the region. Also on the program Daniel Swain, with Stanford's Woods Institute for the Environment, talks about a new study examining the link between drought and global warming released last week. It predicts that by the year 2040 all of California's droughts will be so-called "hot droughts" thanks to rising global temperatures associated with climate change.

Later, VE Host Joe Moore introduces Jeffrey Hess, KVPR's newest reporter. Hess joins the station from Jackson, Mississippi where he covered government and politics.

Ending the program we speak with Fresno Poet David Campos about his award-winning poetry collection "Furious Dusk."

3/17/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Gaming, Minorities, Environmental, Government, Arts

On today's show, Atlantic columnist James Fallows joins us to talk about his new American Futures project, which has him reporting on issues in Fresno and the San Joaquin Valley. We'll also dig into the roots of the conflict within the Chukchansi tribe in Madera County, six months after their casino was forced to close after an armed takeover by a tribal faction.

Later, we'll learn about thousands of residents of a Mariposa county town who are about to run out of water – despite living between two lakes. We'll also find out more about the plans in Kern County that could result in the privatization of that county's public library. Ending the program jazz musician Carmen Bradford about her performance with the Count Basie Orchestra at the Visalia Fox Theatre Saturday March 21, 2015.

3/24/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Business, Health, Arts & Entertainment

On this week's show: why are whitewater rafters the latest group to feel the pain of California's drought? We talk with Lois Henry of the Bakersfield Californian and find out what it means for Kern County's tourism industry.

We'll also debut a new segment that brings you first person accounts of life in the Valley – we call it "My Valley, My Story." This week we'll learn what it's like to get sick in London. But we aren't going to the UK, instead, we'll visit the small farm worker town of London in Tulare County, and learn about the health challenges one woman and her mother face.

That and two special arts segments. First an in-studio appearance by valley musician Omar Nare who has a new show blending traditional mariachi with flamenco, and second we'll talk to a guest from Cirque du Soleil's production Varekai which is at the Save Mart Center this week.

Also on the program the city of Fresno says they are finally going to turn the Fulton mall back into a street. The question of what to do with the aging pedestrian walking area in the center of downtown Fresno has been a sore spot in the city for years. Valley Public Radio's Jeffrey Hess reports city and business leaders say all signs point to the project breaking ground as soon as this fall.

3/31/15 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Health, Healthcare, Law Enforcement, Government, Agriculture, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition we take a look at several issues surrounding a difficult topic, death and dying. We'll learn about a movement to help spur conversations about end of life decisions, a new report on palliative care in California, and a new bill that would bring physician assisted suicide to the Golden State. After the reports we speak with Kate O'Malley, with the California HealthCare Foundation, and Chris Meyers, the director of the Kegley Institute of Ethics at CSU Bakersfield.

KVPR reporter Jeffrey Hess also reports on the latest on Fresno's Deputy Police Chief who was arrested last week on alleged drug charges. We'll also take a tour of the state capitol, and look for some of the hidden history buried inside those historic brick walls - we'll even go inside the massive dome for a special look. That and almond milk – sales are booming, it's produced here in the valley – but when it comes to nutrition – how healthy is it for you? Ending the show we talk about the Fresno Catacomb Party with show representative Mathr De Leon.

Remote Mojave Desert Town Blasts Off Into the Future

The Mojave Desert might seem like an odd place to begin a show about innovation. But stick with us a minute. Remember the experimental passenger spacecraft called Space Ship Two that crashed there during a test flight back in October? That craft was born in the town of Mojave -- population 4,500. A growing number of young rocket scientists and entrepreneurs are slowly transforming this remote desert outpost into a space industry boomtown. The California Report's Los Angeles bureau chief Steven Cuevas reports.

Creating an Innovation Culture: A Conversation With Ideo's Suzanne Howard

These days "innovation" isn't really an option -- it's a necessity for organizations all over of the world. And when they want to innovate, many turn to Ideo. The San Francisco company helps clients work through problems using what's called "design thinking." Rachael Myrow from KQED's Silicon Valley News Desk talked to Suzanne Howard of Ideo about what she considers innovative and how you can spark creativity in your daily life.

After Vision Loss, Job Counselor Helps Clients Stay Focused on Employment

Kate Williams started losing her sight in her 40s due to a rare genetic disease. She was blind by age 65. But she wasn't ready to give up her recruiting career just because of her vision. Reporter Casey Miner spent an afternoon with Williams, who now helps her blind and visually impaired clients keep and find work.

Palo Alto Teacher Finds Creative Schools on Tour

"Innovation" has become a buzz word in the field of education -- encompassing everything from the new technology students use, to different ways principals structure the school day. Palo Alto English teacher David

Cohen took on a year-long tour of some of California's most innovative schools. With help from a Kickstarter campaign, Cohen hit the road, visiting more than 50 public schools up and down the state, and documenting some of the creative and positive changes he's seen along the way. He spoke with The California Report's Education Reporter Ana Tintocalis

Violin Maker Puts Modern Twist on Centuries-Old Craft

Gov. Brown Unveils New State Budget

The old expression "buy low, sell high" applies to the stock market, but also to politics -- and Gov. Jerry Brown is taking full advantage of it. Friday morning Brown unveiled his new state budget, reminding everyone that he inherited a mess with a massive deficit and future shortfalls. But now he says he's righted the ship with a carefully balanced spending plan that invests more in schools and health care, but also saves money for the future. We take a look at the new state budget with John Myers, senior editor of KQED's California Politics and Government Desk.

Two Salvadoran Sisters One Step Closer to Special Immigration Relief

Jennifer Cruz is a 17-year-old from El Salvador who's attending high school in San Mateo County, just south of San Francisco. We've been following her story since she arrived last year to live with her sister Yesenia. She's one of tens of thousands of Central American kids who came to the U.S. illegally on their own last year. Many of them were fleeing gang violence. In Jennifer's case, gang members were threatening to kidnap and rape her. Cruz is now fighting to stay in this country through a special kind of immigration relief. Northern California's Snow Mountain Wilderness Could Become U.S. Monument

Just north of the Bay Area, there's a stretch of more than 300,000 acres that could become California's largest national monument. It runs from Lake Berryessa in Napa County 100 miles north to the Snow Mountain Wilderness, in the Mendocino National Forest. For more than a decade, conservationists have sought special federal protection for the scenic landscapes. Their future may be in the hands of Interior Secretary Sally Jewell, who recently came to the Bay Area to hear the pros and cons. We spoke to Jewell about that, and other issues on the federal lands that make up nearly half of California. Reporter: Craig Miller

Impact of 'Sideways' on Wine Industry Still Felt 10 Years Later

The film "Sideways" opened in wide release 10 years ago this month. It featured a pair of middle-aged men, drinking and misbehaving their way through Santa Barbara wine country. It was a surprise hit, grossing more than $71 million at the box office. It was also a big boon for the fledgling wine industry of the Santa Ynez Valley. We find out about the lasting economic effects of the movie, which arguably changed the way Americans drink wine. Reporter: Brian Watt

Oakland's Restorative Justice Program Could Serve as Model for California's Schools

Last year, California became the first state in the nation to pass a law to limit suspensions because of "willful defiance." That's a catch-all category that includes minor misbehavior like talking back to a teacher. Schools are now adopting a program called "Restorative Justice" to reduce suspensions by teaching students how to resolve conflicts instead of acting out. Incubating a New Wave of Immigrants in Silicon Valley

The newest immigrants in Silicon Valley are coming from countries where new technologies are emerging. They're young, they're hungry and they've left their home countries to be entrepreneurs with no guarantees of success. And you'll find this new generation from the Middle East, Latin America and other parts of the world in tech incubators. Reporter: Beth Willon

Silicon Valley's Last Affordable City

For years the tech boom largely bypassed one little part of Silicon Valley: East Palo Alto. It's just across Highway 101 from Stanford University and all the venture capital firms on Sand Hill Road. Until recently, East Palo Alto was a relatively affordable enclave for working class Latinos and African Americans. That's quickly changing. Reporter: Scott Shafer

Working Class Struggles in the Tech Economy

When we think of Silicon Valley, a lot of us think of hard working people living high on the corporate hog: high-end restaurants on campus, on-site gyms, concierge services, et cetera. But this fabulous work world full of people dreaming up new ways of doing business sits on a base of people doing business the old-fashioned way. Rachael Myrow finds that many of those service workers are struggling to survive. Reporter: Rachael Myrow

South Bay Arts Orgs Using Tech Themes to Attract Audiences

Arts organizations in the South Bay have often struggled for survival in a region where people sometimes seem too busy with their jobs for an evening of entertainment. How Will the Ellen Pao Trial Change Silicon Valley and the Venture Capital World?

Closing arguments continue today in the the gender discrimination trial of Ellen Pao vs. Kleiner Perkins Caufield & Byers. The case has riveted Silicon Valley for the last month. Kleiner Perkins is one of the Valley's storied venture capital firms, it invests in tech start-ups, one of its many successes was Google. Ellen Pao is the CEO of the popular website Reddit, and a former VC at Kleiner Perkins before she got axed. Pao is claiming that sexism held her back when getting promotions and pay raises. I asked Nellie Bowles, a contributor to the online tech site "Re/Code" to start by telling us Pao's side of the story. Reporter: Nellie Bowles.

Families of Disappeared Mexican Students Tour U.S to Rally Against Corruption

In September, 43 students from a teacher training school in Southern Mexico disappeared. With all the stories of violence coming out of Mexico, it was this story that touched a nerve with Mexican-Americans here in California. Now classmates and family members of those students are traveling across the U.S. to appeal for help, especially from Mexican-Americans. Reporter: Brooke Binkowski.

Poll Shows Gloom About Drought as State Senate Passes Emergency Legislation

If there is such a thing as good news when it comes to this historic drought, maybe it's this: Californians finally understand it's a problem. A new PPIC poll finds 43% of those surveyed now think the water woes will continue for the next decade. Meantime, the state senate approved emergency legislation Wednesday to provide more money for drought relief. Reporter: John Myers.

Lawsuit Challenges Family Detention Policy

Remember last summer when tens of thousands of Central American migrants showed up at the US-Mexico border? What happened to them? Turns out nearly 4000 mothers and their children were locked up. That's a big change in immigration policy. Now advocates are challenging these family detentions in court Reporter: Julie Small.

California Loosens Sex Offender Residency Restrictions

California will soon begin loosening voter-approved restrictions on where registered sex offenders can live. The move follows a recent State Supreme Court ruling. Reporter: Scott Shafer.

Lawsuit Could Halt Detention of Central America Children

On Thursday, we told you about a mother and her son who waded across the Rio Grande to escape death threats in El Salvador. If the boy had crossed the border alone, the government would have sent him to stay with a relative in California. But because the boy came with his mom, ICE locked them up. Immigration authorities started detaining families last summer to manage a spike in Central American migrants. But advocates say locking up children violates a decades-old agreement. They're making that case next month in a federal court in Los Angeles. Reporter: Julie Small.

Police Stand Together to Honor Fallen San Jose Officer

San Jose is mourning the death of Police Officer Michael Johnson this week. He was gunned down on duty by a man as he responded to a distress call. The funeral for Johnson is sure to draw police officers from around the state. Host Scott Shafer sits down with the president of the San Francisco Police Officers Association, and talks with him about pride in the profession, the risks and responsibilities of being an officer and why every law enforcement death is felt keenly by the men and women in blue. Reporter: Scott Shafer

California Foodways: The Chinese-Mexican Cuisine You'll Find Only Along the Border

If you ask people in the city of Mexicali, Mexico about their most notable regional cuisine, they won't say street tacos or mole. They'll say Chinese food. Above the border, the population is mostly Latino, but Chinese restaurants are super popular there, too. Reporter Lisa Morehouse heads to the Imperial Valley on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border to discover the history behind some dishes you won't find anywhere else. It's the latest episode in our series "California Foodways," stories at the intersection of food, culture, economy and history. Reporter: Lisa Morehouse

Outlook Grim for California Snow Survey

It's no secret we've got big problems with water in California. A new survey from the Public Policy Institute of California this week shows two-thirds of adults say our lack of water is a big problem. Folks in the Central Valley are the most likely to be worried, and for good reason. Agriculture uses 80 percent of the state's water. Next week will tell us just how serious the drought is. On Thursday, the Sierra snowpack will be measured for the last time this year. Host Scott Shafer talks with Craig Miller, science editor for KQED News.

Marking the Armenian Genocide Anniversary by Featuring Living Armenian Composers

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. One of the ways it's being marked here in California is with a showcase of "new" music by contemporary Armenian composers, organized by a student at Fresno State University. Reporter: Alice Daniel

Two Bay Area Jazz Groups Make Monk Their Muse on New Releases

If modern jazz had its own Mount Rushmore, Thelonious Monk's face would be smack dab in the middle. But there's nothing set in stone about his music. More than three decades after Monk's death, musicians of all stripes continue to test their creativity with his ingenious compositions. Jazz critic Andrew Gilbert reviews two new CDs by Bay Area artists who are finding new inspiration in Monk's music: The Lost Trio and Alex Conde

For LAPD Cops, Training Program Teaches Empathy, Not Aggression

The deaths of Eric Garner in New York, Michael Brown in Missouri, and now, Charly Keunang on LA's Skid Row have sparked a debate over how officers deal with aggressive suspects. In LA, some officers are learning to answer angry, hostile people not by reaching for their guns but with a different tact: slowing down, talking and trying to empathize. Reporter: Frank Stoltze

Are Emissions From Asia The Cause of LA's Dirty Air?

Los Angeles gets a bad rap for its smog but California's Central Valley also has the dubious distinction of having some of the dirtiest air in the nation. The source of bad air ranges from its vast ag industry to the trucks hauling goods up-and-down Highway 99. But air regulators say there might be another source of pollution -- Asia. Reporter: Alice Daniel.

New Law Questions Health Risks of Cleaning Products to Adults

You know you have got to keep cleaning products away from kids because they're not safe. But are those products safe for the rest of us? The answer is, we don't really know. And so lawmakers have proposed a law to help us find out. Reporter: Marisa Lagos.
