October 1, 2017 – December 31, 2017 (Q4)
Program: KVPR/KPRX's Valley Edition
Host: Joe Moore

10/3/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Violence, Healthcare, Business, Government & Politics

On this week's Valley Edition our team reports on Sunday's mass shooting in Las Vegas and the shortage of doctors in the region. Later we hear from Tulare hospital board President Kevin Northcraft about troubles at Tulare Regional Medical Center. Ending the program we hear from business leader and philanthropist Tom Steyer.

10/10/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Housing, Labor, Environmental, Health, Arts & Entertainment

On this week's Valley Edition our team reports stories on how short-term rentals like Airbnb are making it tough for Yosemite National Park officials to fill much needed jobs in the park. We also hear from a group of California fire fighters helping out with the aftermath of Hurricane Maria on Puerto Rico. Later we hear from a UC Merced researcher about her latest study on antibiotic resistance and from an author with a new book all about California's once booming motel industry. Ending the program we hear from the Fresno Philharmonic's new conductor Rei Hotoda.

10/17/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Government, Housing, Business, Environmental, Arts & Entertainment

This week on Valley Edition our team reports on insurance premiums going up in fire zones and about two possible violations of the Brown Act in the region. We also hear from Craig Scharton, with the Downtown Fresno Partnership, about the reopening of Fresno's Fulton Mall as Fulton Street. Later FM89's Ezra David Romero takes a ride on the Yosemite Mountain Sugar Pine Railroad that was almost lost in the Railroad Fire in September. Ending the program we hear about a rally in memory of Fresno artist, curator and cyclist Ed Lund.

10/24/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Business, Transportation, Education, Cultural, Energy, Labor, Parks & Recreation

On this week's Valley Edition we start the program with a segment on Fresno's new Fulton Street, which until recently was a pedestrian mall. Our team interviews a number of people about their thoughts on the project. We also learn about a program at Reedley College called a human library with a goal of broadening understanding of cultures and issues. Later we hear from Lois Henry, formerly a columnist with the Bakersfield Californian, about the loss of oil industry jobs in Kern County. And ending the program we air our latest episode of Outdoorsy with a focus on mountain biking.

10/31/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Education, Labor, Agriculture, Violence, Women's Rights, Government & Politics

This week on Valley Edition our team reports stories on a potential teacher's strike within Fresno Unified as well as what farmers may do if a popular pesticide is restricted. We also hear about a new program in Tulare County being implemented to hopefully reduce the number of domestic violence cases in the area. Later we hear from The Fresno Bee's Jim Boren who announced this week that he's retiring at the end of the year.

11/7/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Business, Transportation, Labor, Crime & Punishment, Health

This week on Valley Edition we hear an in-depth report about a number of changes in the works that could bring new life to a long struggling valley neighborhood - southwest Fresno. We also learn why changes are in store for the City of Fresno's FAX bus service that could improve service for some at the cost of others. We also go in-depth with interviews on the issue of human trafficking in Fresno with two reporters from the Fresno Bee, and learn about efforts to reduce cyclist and pedestrian fatalities in Kern County with Vision Zero Kern.

11/14/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Healthcare, Poverty, Government, Marijuana Legalization, Education, Transportation, Arts

This week on Valley Edition, we get reports on the surprising reason insurance premiums for many Covered California customers are dropping, and what local health care leaders are doing to address a rise in pre-term births in Fresno County. We also explore the following issues in interviews:

- Bakersfield City Councilmember Andrae Gonzales on the city's crackdown on pot dispensaries, and plans in the works for downtown
- Fresno Bee reporter Mackenzie Mays on her series on sex education
- KVPR reporter Jeffrey Hess on the company which could win a contract to operate the high-speed rail system
- Jazz vocal star Kevin Mahogany on his upcoming Fresno concert at the Tower Theater

11/21/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Housing, Healthcare, Health, Women, Government & Politics, Environmental

This week on Valley Edition, it's been two years since the Summerset Village Apartments raised the issue of substandard rental housing in Fresno to a level city hall couldn't ignore. Earlier this year, the city council adopted a new ordinance creating a rental housing inspection program, but nine months later, inspections have yet to begin. We also hear a report on how a new local effort is using Mr. Potato Head dolls to help the parents of premature babies cope with their situation.

We also hear interviews with:

Harold Pierce of the Bakersfield Californian, about new developments in on-going coverage of valley fever, Roger Bales of UC Merced, on new research on Giant Sequoias and California's drought.

11/28/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Government & Politics, Labor, Education, Youth

This week on Valley Edition, we get the latest on allegations that Madera County DA David Linn made sexual and racist remarks about employees and crime victims in the workplace. FM89's Kerry Klein reports on what Monday's move by the Board of Supervisors to censure Linn and ask for his resignation means for the county, as well as Linn's denials and claims of political retaliation.

We also learn about a new report from the Public Policy Institute of California that is critical of the state's efforts to improve the pathway from high school to college, especially when it comes to math and English. Plus an interview with Republican gubernatorial candidate John Cox, and a preview of next week's grand opening of the new Tehachapi Library in Kern County.

12/5/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Business, Transportation, Housing, Military, Health, Government & Politics, Sports, Youth

Today on Valley Edition we hear a report about changes looming in Fresno's historic Chinatown neighborhood. Many roads in the area are already closed with construction on high-speed rail, and that's causing some concern among business owners. Yet others are optimistic about a brighter future ahead, with new community improvements, millions in cap-and-trade funding, new housing, and the future rail station. We also hear a report about the role the U.S. military has played in researching valley fever, much of which has taken place at Lemoore Naval Air Station. And reporter Kerry Klein brings us the latest on the congressional fight over the CHIP program, and what it means for the valley. Plus interviews with journalists Megan Greenwell and Emily Benson, about their reporting on Latina teen boxers from the valley, and a controversial deal awaiting congressional approval involving the Westlands Water District.

12/12/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Marijuana Legalization, Government & Politics, Education, Economy

This week we learn what happens when you don't "check before you burn" by taking a trip to the Valley Air District's "fireplace school." We also talk to Fresno City Councilmember Clint Olivier about his plans to legalize a number of businesses involved in the marijuana industry in Fresno, and about a proposal that would give members of the city council a raise. We also hear how students at Fresno State may have kicked off a rebellion over student fees that extends system-wide in the CSU. We also hear an interview with California Treasurer and gubernatorial candidate John Chiang.

12/19/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Environmental, Education, Poverty, Arts & Entertainment, Government & Politics

This week on Valley Edition we learn about new progress on the effort to bring Chinook salmon back to the San Joaquin River. We also hear about a valley program that for 25 years has been helping kids from communities like Parlier go to Ivy League schools. And we get an inside look at what it takes to put on a Fresno holiday tradition - Christmas Tree Lane. Plus Fresno City Councilmember Garry Bredefeld joins us to talk about his stance on medical marijuana, and an investigation into comments he made about race and the NFL that city clerk Yvonne Spence claimed resulted in a hostile work environment.

12/26/17 VE 9:00-10:00am

Issues: Local, Immigration, Law Enforcement, Government & Politics, Tech, Transportation, Business

This week on Valley Edition, we talk to Fresno County Sheriff Margaret Mims about her thoughts as the county begins to implement SB 54, California's "Sanctuary State" bill. Mims was one of the bill's biggest critics when it made its way through the legislature, and she was worked closely with federal immigration officials in the past. We also talk with Bakersfield City Councilmember Bob Smith about the city's budget gap and about the idea of putting a tax increase in front of voters. And we speak with tech reporter Sean O'Kane from The Verge to learn the latest about Faraday Future, the company that plans to build an advanced electric car at the old Pirelli factory in Hanford.

A Week After a Massacre, Life Goes on in Vegas

More than half the victims of this week's mass shooting in Las Vegas were from California. Many Southern Californians, especially, have a deep connection to Las Vegas, but in the heart of the Las Vegas Strip, there's not a lot of obvious acknowledgment of what happened, with casinos and hotel marquees still ablaze with intensity. The California Report's Steven Cuevas has been in Las Vegas all week, and he observes what's changed since Sunday, and what hasn't.

Just Like My Mother: How We Inherit Our Parents' Traits and Tragedies

For many of us, our worst fear is ending up just like our mom or dad. It's easy for our parents' traits and habits to get passed down to us, and the same is true for the tragedies they experienced. Many Vietnamese refugees who fled the war and its aftermath don't like to talk about the circumstances of their escape, but as April Dembosky explains, the traumas they faced live on in their children.

Years After Tragedy, Fresno's Hmong Seek Cultural Understanding for Next Generation

About 20 years ago, eight Hmong teenagers in Fresno committed suicide. Their parents were refugees from Laos, and they knew the teen deaths were connected to their past. The California Report's Central Valley Reporter Vanessa Rancaño looks at how second generation Hmong are reclaiming their parents' history.

Editor of Prison Newspaper Leaves Legacy Behind

California's journalistic community buried one of its own this week. Arnulfo Garcia was editor-in-chief of the San Quentin News, a newspaper produced, written and edited by inmates. He formed the first and only chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists inside a prison. Just two months after his release from prison, at 65 years old, Garcia died in a car crash near Gilroy. As Joanne Jennings reports, Garcia's accomplishments reached far beyond the prison newsroom.

Voices from Fire Ravaged Northern California

In Northern California, the week began with a sudden onslaught of flames whipped up by the wind. Multiple wildfires erupted across wine country. Homes, businesses and entire towns have been burned to the ground. Now, even as firefighters continue to work, many residents are returning to see what is left.

For Santa Rosa's KZST Radio Station, the News is Personal

Before Sunday night, if you tuned into KZST 100.1FM in Santa Rosa, you'd probably hear a talk show, pop music, or some classic hits. But since fires broke out across Sonoma County, phone and Internet access have been severely limited. So, the station's staff has transformed it into an essential news source, broadcasting information about the wildfires live, 24/7. The station is surrounded by some of the worst fire damage to date. Ninna Gaensler-Debs takes us there.

My Santa Rosa

KQED Online Arts Editor Gabe Meline lives in Santa Rosa, one of cities worst hit by the wildfires, with his wife and daughter. When they left their house, they grabbed their emotional treasures: their photos, old letters and their cat. The family is fortunate. Their house has survived, but Meline is a third generation Santa Rosan, and the fires have devastated the landscape where he grew up, and the sentimental landmarks that make the city his hometown.

What Happens When You Have 'Fish Blood,' But You Can't Fish?

For centuries, the Yurok tribe has lived along and fished the Klamath River in California's far north. But this fall, the number of chinook salmon making their way up the Klamath is the smallest on record. Salmon is essential to the Yurok. It doesn't just represent food or livelihood; salmon is life. For the series California Foodways, Lisa Morehouse went north to Yurok country.

Voices From the Fires

The wildfires that roared through Wine Country will rank among the deadliest and most destructive in California history. But many Californians are already jumping in, doing what they can now to support the recovery. We hear from both survivors and volunteers, who are looking ahead to a new future, post-fire.

Survivor of the Oakland Hills Fires Offers Advice to North Bay Fire Victim

Jill Permutt couldn't sleep the night the fires broke out near her home in Santa Rosa-- the moon was oddly red, and the winds were whipping fast. That feeling of desperate, surreal, surging panic? Joan Tanzer has felt it too. She lost her house in the Oakland Hills firestorm of 1991. Until last week, the two women were strangers. But then a mutual friend told Joan about Jill, about how her entire neighborhood in Santa Rosa had just burned to the ground. Joan called her right away, and since then they've talked several times. Sasha Khokha brings us inside their conversation, to hear the exchange of stories and advice.

Helping Homeless Kids Stay In School

When families lose their homes, whether from fire, foreclosure or another kind disaster, helping the kids adapt is tough. Now we're going to hear about fifth grader who became homeless after his family was evicted from their home in Oakland. He spends hours just trying to get to school each day. Federal law says school districts are supposed to help students like him, making it as easy as possible for them to get to school, even as they bounce around in search of stability. Reporter Lee Romney spent the day with 10-year-old Naseem Bennett.

Worshipping at Santa Monica's Church of Type

In Santa Monica, off Pico Boulevard, there's a shop that feels like it's from another time, from the era before computers, scanners and copiers. Kevin Bradley, the proprietor, is a master of the handset letterpress. After spending two decades building up his business in Tennessee, he came West to carry on the sacred tradition. Reporter Peter Gilstrap takes us to Bradley's storefront studio, the Church of Type.

The Water Belongs to Everyone, and This Blind Kayaker Will Prove It

We start our show with a man on a mythological mission. His name is Ahmet Ustunel. He lives in San Francisco, and he has a dream. He wants to return to his homeland of Turkey and take a big journey on a tiny kayak across the Bosphorus Strait, one of the busiest shipping channels in the world. Think enormous freighters. And his little human-powered boat. But Ahmet Ustunel faces a unique challenge that will make this much harder for him. The California Report's Laura Klivans joined him at a lake, where he's training to make the journey.

You May Have Seen This Man Zippering Around Berkeley, but Did You Know He's the Godfather of Disability Rights?

"Hale" is a new short film exploring activism around people with disabilities. It tells the story of Hale Zukas, who helped make Berkeley the birthplace of the disability rights movement. He was diagnosed with cerebral palsy as a child. He went on to study Russian and math at UC Berkeley in the 1970s and he helped found Berkeley's groundbreaking Center for Independent Living. Filmmaker Brad Bailey made the documentary as his thesis project at UC Berkeley's Graduate School of Journalism. He just picked up a Student Academy Award for the project.

Oakland Dad Reunites with Family After Lengthy ICE Detention

We introduced you to this family a few months ago, when they found themselves in limbo because of new immigration policies under President Trump. The father, Maguiber -- he's named after the guy in the TV show Maguiver -- is from Guatemala. He's 27, and undocumented. He was arrested by immigration agents in February, and held in a jail in the Bay Area city of Richmond. Meanwhile, his wife has been struggling to care for their three children on her own. Maguiber has no serious or violent criminal history. In the past someone like him probably would have been released within a month or two on bond. But Maguiber spent over half a year in detention, before he got his day court. KQED's Julie Small brings us this update on his story.

A Day of the Dead Tradition Blooms in the Central Valley

In some California communities with roots in Mexico, the last days of October are spent getting ready for Day of the Dead, and that means making altars for loved ones and covering them with marigolds. Those bright orange flowers aren't always easy to find. The California Report's Vanessa Rancaño met a farmer who's growing them in the Central Valley for people longing for a piece of home.

Welcome to Zzyzx, California – Population: 1

A lot of us Californians like to hit the open road, explore miles of highway, or venture off into some back roads. Sometimes, we come across towns with some pretty bizarre and surprising names, from Rough and Ready to Bumpass Hell. So today we're launching a new series we're calling "A Place Called What?!" For our first installment, we head to Zzyzx. If you're driving on I-15 near Death Valley, you might spot the sign. You won't find any shops or restaurants or even houses there. But you will find the Desert Studies Center, a research station operated by a consortium of seven California State Universities. Rob Fulton manages the center, and he's the only permanent resident in Zzyzx.

Issues: Local, Environmental, Housing, Crime & Punishment, LGBT Rights, Arts & Entertainment, Historical Sound Guru Bernie Krause's Beloved 'Wild Sanctuary' Destroyed by Fire

Last month's fires in Northern California destroyed thousands of homes and businesses. But we also lost some key cultural landmarks. One of those places was an inspiration to artists, scientists and sound recordists around the world. Yet mostly unknown to its neighbors in Sonoma County's Valley of the Moon. It was home and studio of Kat and Bernie Krause. KQED Science Editor Craig Miller had visited many times before - both as a journalist and friend. After the fire, he returned, to help sort through the rubble - and record this story.

Nearly 2,000 Miles From Home, A Prisoner Gets a Visit From His Mom

More than a decade ago, then-Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger declared a state of emergency in our state's prison system. That meant prison officials could do whatever it took to ease the overcrowding, including shipping thousands of inmates to other states. It was supposed to be a temporary solution. But many years later, many California prisoners are still locked up out of state. KCRW's George Lavender follows one mother on a journey to see her son, who's now two thousand miles away.

Trans Singer Encounters Mother (and Bathroom Laws) on Tour in the South

For more than 40 years, the San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus has used its music to help create community and inspire activism. The chorus recently went on a tour of five southern states. The idea was to support local LGBTQ communities in the South. KQED Arts Reporter Chloe Veltman caught up with them on the tour bus. She tells us about one of the singers and his mom, who hadn't heard him perform since he was living as a little girl.

Lost Mural with Covert Political Messages Rediscovered in Post Office Basement

You may not have heard of Victor Arnautoff, but he was a Russian artist who painted murals around San Francisco in the 1930s. He started off as an assistant to Diego Rivera and became known for his work on San Francisco's Coit Tower. He also painted three murals inside California post offices, including one in the Bay Area city of Richmond. But as Eli Wirtshafter tells us, that mural disappeared for almost 40 years. Until an amateur sleuth tracked it down.

Rough and Ready, CA; 'Don't Pass History By'

Now for another installment of our new series, A Place Called What?!, about California towns with bizarre and surprising names. Last week we took you to Zzyzx, near Death Valley. And we asked our listeners for their ideas for weird place names. Scott Schlacter of San Jose sent us a note asking how the town of "Rough and Ready" near Grass Valley in Nevada County got its name. So KQED's Bianca Taylor called up Jayna Ashcraft, who lives in Rough and Ready. She says her small gold mining town has a big history: in 1850, it seceded from the nation, and temporarily became its own republic.

From Vietnam Vet to Punk Rock Legend

Flipper may not be the best-known band from Oakland – but after more than 40 years, it's definitely one of punk's most influential, inspiring scores of musicians like Kurt Cobain and Moby. And a large part of its signature sound comes from guitarist Ted Falconi, a Vietnam vet who brought the noises of war home with him. KQED's Kevin Jones has this profile.

American Veterans Exiled From the Country They Served

Jose Cardenas decided to enlist in the Army because his stepfather was a veteran. Cardenas' son and grandson have kept up that family tradition of military service. But Cardenas lives in Mexico now, not by choice, but because he's been deported. He's one of tens of thousands of veterans who've served in the U.S. military but aren't U.S. citizens. KQED's Erika Aguilar met him in Tijuana where hundreds of deported veterans now live.

What Veterans Want at the End of Life

Many veterans of the Vietnam war are now in their seventies, and some are coming to the end of their lives. And what soldiers, even former soldiers, want in death may be very different from what civilians want. Honor and respect can be much more important than being comfortable or free of pain. That can make vets harder to treat at the end of life, as KQED's health reporter April Dembosky explains in this story.

Forks of Salmon, CA: Inspiring the Adventurous Life

In our continuing series "A Place Called What??" about California places with peculiar names, we visit Forks of Salmon, a very tiny town in Siskiyou County where two forks of the Salmon River meet. To find out more about the town, the California Report's Bianca Taylor called up professional kayaker and filmmaker Rush Sturges, who was born and raised in the place he affectionately calls "Forks."

A North Korean Refugee's Journey to a Life in Southern California

President Donald Trump's trip to Asia this week comes at a point of extreme tension between the US and North Korea. One sticking point has to do with North Korean refugees and Trump's executive order banning them from entering the US. The ban worries North Korean refugees already here. Many survived a harrowing journey, and left friends and family behind. KCRW's Benjamin Gottlieb tells the story of one man who escaped North Korea and made it to California.

Legendary Spanish Tenor Plácido Domingo's 50-Year L.A. Run

Fifty years ago this week, Plácido Domingo made his Los Angeles debut. The buzz around the young opera powerhouse was just building. Soon, he'd be in demand at opera houses across the globe. But he'd return to Southern California again and again. Not only as a performer but as an impresario who helped opera in Los Angeles flourish. The California Report's LA bureau chief Steven Cuevas has more.

Which "Book" Would You Check Out Of This Human Library?

People go to libraries to learn something new, to escape into a different world. But what if a trip to the library let you spend time with someone you would never otherwise hang out with? That's what happened at a community college in the Central Valley. KVPR's Kerry Klein takes us to a human library.

A Winery Faces Life After Fire

Our series "Family Biz" explores the stories behind small, family owned California businesses. This one's about a family trying to map out their future - after the recent wildfires in Mendocino County. Four generations of the Frey family live and work at their winery. It was the first organic and biodynamic winery to open in the U.S. The October wildfires destroyed almost all the houses and buildings. Reporter April Dembosky takes us to the vineyard where the family's trying to figure out what it will take to save their business.

"California Typewriter" – An Ode to Analogue

California Typewriter is new documentary film that's an ode to analog, a visual poem dedicated to the typewriter. It's named for a Berkeley repair shop struggling to stay afloat in the digital age. The film features some big fans of the machine, including Tom Hanks, John Mayer and Sam Shepard. Doug Nichol is the Bay-Area based director of the film, and he sat down with Sasha Khokha to talk type.

Ghosts of Gold Rush Linger in Tiny (Lava-Free) Volcano

And now it's time for our series "A Place Called What?" about California towns with bizarre and surprising names. This week, we're headed to Volcano, in Amador County. It used to be a booming town during the gold rush, but now it's home to a little more than a hundred people, including John Hemstreet. He lived in Sacramento for 60 years, before moving to Volcano.

Food and Family from Students at 826 Valencia

Food is a big part of spending time with family over the holidays. For 13-year-old Makhai Hunt, it's a chance to learn recipes passed down through generations. And 12-year-old Stevie Rivas is thinking about sharing with people who don't have enough to eat. They bring us two commentaries now, produced with the San Francisco writing program, 826 Valencia.

Family Biz: Bringing Seniors Some Love, the Old-School Way

Some families only really see each other over the holidays. But not the folks in our "Family Biz" series - about small family owned businesses in California. 83-year old Michael Nash inspired his family business, with his daily walk down his driveway, to unlock his mailbox. And that gave his daughter in law, Kim Nash, an idea. Sasha Khokha has more.

Vallejo's Sons of the Soul Revivers: Lifting Up Spirits, Outside the Church Walls

Some families figure out their groove together by making music, like the Bay Area gospel quartet, "The Sons of the Soul Revivers." They've been singing together for 47 years, since they were kids in church. Their new album is called Live at Rancho Nicasio. The Morgan brothers -- Dwayne, James, and Walter Jr., along with their nephew, Quantae Johnson -- join us for a chat and performance.

Helping the Homeless, By Living With Them

In some ways, California was the birthplace of the sharing revolution. In the sixties it was communes and community gardens. Now, there's a tiny Bay Area nonprofit that is trying to use sharing to help the homeless. It's called Safe Time. Think Air B and B, but the rooms are free. Teryl Burt was one of the first to sign up. She's 65, and she lives alone in a three bedroom townhouse in El Cerrito, near Berkeley. She recently invited a homeless family to live with her. Ariel Plotnick visited to check in on how it's going.

Going to Bumpass Hell? Better Watch Your Step

Our series "A Place Called What?" takes us to California places with bizarre and surprising names. This week, we're headed to Bumpass Hell, in Plumas County. It's not exactly a town. It's a spot in Lassen Volcanic National Park, where Karen Haner is the Chief of Interpretation and education. That means she makes the signs that warn people why it's risky to go off trail.

One Politician, One Reporter, and the Terrible Loss They Both Share

Usually, political reporters and the politicians they watchdog have something of a contentious relationship. Like reporter Allen Young, who's interviewed West Sacramento Mayor Christopher Cabaldon as part of his beat for years. But they recently discovered they share something unusual, and terrible in common: when they were young, they were both in tragic accidents that killed their mothers. Years later, their moms continue to influence and inspire them.

Giant Tree Stump Journeys from Sierra Nevada to SF Opera Stage

The Gold Rush era in California. It's a time artists and writers often romanticized. Like Mark Twain or Puccini, in his 1910 opera, The Girl of the Golden West. Now, a new opera about the Gold Rush, Girls of the Golden West, tells a much darker story. Think greed, racism, and environmental destruction. KQED's Chloe Veltman brings us the story of how the massive stump of a giant sequoia tree made a journey from the Sierra Nevada to the opera stage.

After the Fires, a North Bay School for Autistic Children Seeks a New Normal

California is grappling with wildfire, again. Fierce winds whipping up fast-moving flames, people evacuating, communities threatened. Once the flames are out, it can take months for communities and families to recover. For students at a school in Santa Rosa that serves high-functioning autistic kids, the past few months have been really tough. The school, called the Anova Center for Education, burned down. Nine families from the school lost their houses, too. Anova was a home away from home for them. Reporter Lee Romney checks in on one 12-year-old student, and what the school has been doing to get him and his peers back to a calming classroom routine.

Kern County School's Controversial Discipline Practices

Last month, California's Superintendent for Public Instruction announced that across California, suspensions have been cut in half, compared to five years ago. Expulsions are down more than 40 percent. The state has encouraged these reductions. But the story behind the numbers is complicated. As schools stop relying on suspensions and expulsions to discipline students, some have found other ways to keep bad behavior in check. One middle school in Kern County has turned to drastic measures. KQED's Education Reporter, Vanessa Rancano takes us to a little farmworker town called Weedpatch.

#UsToo: An Oakland Teacher's Story

Hundreds of people have responded to our survey about their experiences with sexual harassment at the workplace and elsewhere. KQED's Silicon Valley Senior Editor Tonya Mosley has been collecting their responses. And this week, we're launching a new series called "Us Too." Today, we hear from Sonia Lee, an elementary school teacher from Oakland, about an encounter early in her career, and how that moment has impacted the way she teaches.

Sex Ed That Goes Beyond Anatomy and Physiology

Many teachers are now rethinking how they approach sex education. KQED's Tonya Mosley takes us inside a Menlo Park classroom, where consent, sexual harassment and preventing sexual assault are the lessons of the day.

Archaeologists Find 300-Pound Sphinx Statue in SoCal Sand Dunes

Last year, we took you to the Guadalupe-Nipomo sand dunes near Santa Barbara, where the 1920s blockbuster the "The Ten Commandments" was filmed. Remains of the movie set are still buried in the sand. Now, as Bianca Taylor tells us, archaeologists have made a big discovery.

In San Francisco, New Public Art You Can't Avoid Seeing

San Francisco's skyline is undergoing a makeover, as builders put the finishing touches on a giant tower that's about to become the second tallest building in the state. Love it or hate it, the Salesforce Tower is scheduled open to early next year. With a unique twist: the top of the tower will be a public work of art that will change minute-by-minute. Reporter Cari Spivack explores what it means to make public art that people can't avoid seeing.

They Went from Immigrants to "Burrito Royalty"

You can find them in convenience stores and college dorms. In lots of school cafeterias, and family freezers. They're an everyday, quintessentially California food. And they're made in the Central Valley town of Dinuba. That's where we're headed next, for our series Family Biz. Lisa Morehouse of California Foodways takes us to the heart of a multi-million dollar family business.

A Former Jehovah's Witness Shares Her #MeToo Story

As the #MeToo movement is creating a space for more people to come forward with stories of sexual harassment and abuse, we've been collecting stories from our listeners, for a series we're calling #UsToo. This week, we hear from a woman from the Bay Area City of Fremont, who's a former Jehovah's Witness. Her name is Georgia Browne, and she says she was ex-communicated from the church after she reported being raped by a congregant.

A Tiny San Francisco Cookbook Store with a Big Appetite for Old Recipes

It's a chilly December night, and people are huddled inside a tiny bookstore in San Francisco, filled with the smell of chocolate. Platters of fresh-baked chocolate chip cookies, and bowls full of chocolate pieces. It's a celebration of the new book Making Chocolate: From Bean to Bar to S'mores. This is the kind of thing that happens almost every night at Omnivore Books on Food. They specialize in rare and vintage cookbooks, as well as new books about food. Host Sasha Khokha stopped by during a quieter morning to chat with owner and founder Celia Sack.

The Punjabi Immigrant Who Started El Cerrito's Favorite Christmas Tradition

Punjabi immigrant Sundar Shadi created an ornate Christmas display on the hillside above his home in El Cerrito nearly 70 years ago. He wasn't a Christian, but he wanted to do something to delight his neighbors for the holidays. His hand-crafted sheep, camels, and wise men are still displayed every year by a community that wants to keep his creation alive. Reporter Spencer Silva brings us the story behind Shadi's elaborate tableau.

Giving Back With the Gift of a 'Tamalada'

We head to the bustling kitchen of the St. Francis Center in downtown LA, near Skid Row, where pots are steaming on the stove and the air smells of onions, chilies, and garlic. This place has been supporting homeless and low-income folks for decades. But as KQED's Tena Rubio explains, the people who receive those services are now giving back through a tamale-making contest. The winner makes thousands of tamales each holiday season – and the sales help keep the center going.

Rainbow Girls Turn Up Their Political Message By Turning Off Their Amps

The Sonoma coast town of Bodega Bay is best known as the dark backdrop for Alfred Hitchcock's film, The Birds. These days, the town is home to Rainbow Girls, a folk group whose new album "American Dream" explores the frayed promise of that dream. Lively harmonies, with politics at their core. They join host Sasha Khokha to chat about their songwriting process, their lives as roommates and bandmates, and their transformation from an edgy rock band to a stripped-down acoustic trio. They bring along their guitars and harmonica for a mini-concert in our studios.

Exploring the Refugee Experience

Our show begins inside a brand new cafe in Berkeley. The baristas are all refugees, and the name -- 1951 Coffee Company -- refers to the 1951 Refugee Convention. It defines who refugees are and the protections nations must give them. It was signed by 145 nations in the aftermath of World War II.

Syrian Family Puts Down New Roots in Oakland

One of the baristas at the café is a recent arrival. Batool Rawoas has been in the United States just under two years. She's learning about coffee, but also about customer service and California culture. Reporter Laura Klivans went to her family's home in Oakland, to talk with her parents, and get the story behind their 7,000-mile journey from Syria to the San Francisco Bay Area.

Vietnamese Author Shares Stories of Southeast Asian Refugee Families, Including His Own

Viet Thanh Nguyen was four years old when he fled his home country. He is among the hundreds of thousands of refugees who came to the United States after the war with Communist Vietnam. The Southern California author won the 2016 Pulitzer prize for his novel "The Sympathizer." He talks with host Sasha Khokha about his newest book, a collection of short stories called "The Refugees."

Jewish Man Who Fled Nazis Reflects on Layered History of Refugee Policy in United States

In December 1945 President Harry Truman issued a directive allowing displaced people from Europe to come to the United States. But it wasn't only for humanitarian reasons. The U.S. was concerned about geo-political stability in Europe. Truman's decision to accept those refugees came just in time for 95-year-old Ben Stern of Berkeley. He was one of the passengers on the SS Marine Flasher, the very first ship carrying Holocaust survivors to arrive in the US after the war. Host Sasha Khokha spent time with him and shares his story.
