Legislature Approves $15 Minimum Wage, Brown Says He'll Sign It

The California Senate gave its final approval to eventually raise the state's minimum wage to $15 an hour making it the highest in the nation. The Assembly passed the bill earlier in the day and Governor Jerry Brown is expected to sign the bill into law on Monday. With the threat of a November ballot measure to raise the minimum wage looming, this agreement came together and passed both houses in less than a week. Reporter: Katie Orr.

Crabbers Finding Little Reward in Late Season Start

California's dungeness crab season officially opened this week, nearly five months late. Many crabbers are happy to be working, but a bit concerned about the catch. Reporter: Sarah Tan.

California's Last Institutions for Developmentally Disabled to be Closed

California is planning to close its large institutions for the developmentally disabled. Over the past two decades, the state has been slowly closing them and moving developmentally disabled residents into smaller facilities. Today the State Department of Developmental Services is submitting a proposal to lawmakers detailing the final step for the closures. Reporter: David Gorn.

There's Snow in the Sierra, But Don't Pop the Champagne

This week, state water officials conducted an important measurement of the Sierra snowpack. The good news? The water content was 87 percent of average. But in terms of the drought, we would have had to surpass that figure, into the way, way, way above-average category to really celebrate. We talk with KQED Science Editor Craig Miller about where we stand as California's wet season winds down.

With Bees in Trouble, Almond Farmers Try Trees That Don't Need 'Em

Next time you're snacking on a handful of almonds, think about bees. Almonds wouldn't be the cash crop they are if weren't for the hardworking bees that help pollinate the trees. But what if the trees no longer needed bees for pollination? We find out about a new breed of almond that could put these busy insects out of work.

How Theater Transformed This HIV-Positive Grandmother's Life

If you could go back in time and give the teenage you some advice, what would you say? That's the question Cassandra Steptoe wrestled with as she wrote a monologue for a play. Steptoe says theater gave her a voice and helped her overcome a past of abuse, addiction and incarceration. For decades, Steptoe felt like she couldn't talk about her HIV diagnosis with anyone. Now she explores her experience in-depth and on stage to help inspire others.

Lasagna & Kleenex: Reaching Out Online in the Face of Death

Los Angeles is a big place, right? It can feel a bit lonely at times, and a friendly voice in the morning can mean a lot, setting you on your way in the day. For the last 16 years, Steve Julian has been the local Morning Edition host at KPCC Public Radio in Los Angeles. Now, he's dying from brain cancer. And his wife Felicia Friesema has been blogging about it. For the latest episode of our radio series and podcast "Love in the Digital Age," co-producers Rachael Myrow and Polly Stryker went to L.A. to talk with them.

Hundreds of Migrant Teens Are Being Held Indefinitely in Locked Detention

What happens to migrant kids who make the journey to the U.S. without their parents? Many are fleeing criminal gangs in Central America and they may be eligible for asylum. Most spend about a month in a government shelter, before they're placed with a relative or a sponsor to wait for their day in immigration court. But hundreds of kids are being locked up for months -- even years. We've been digging into this story to follow some of those kids, and their families, collaborating with Reveal from The Center for Investigative Reporting and PRX. Reporter: Tyche Hendricks.

L.A. Stage Drama Journeys to the Heart of Child Immigrant Crisis

San Bernardino Struggles to Remain 'SB Strong' in the Face of Rising Violence

Four months ago, all eyes were on San Bernardino after 14 people were gunned down in a terrorist attack. Mourners filled a baseball stadium. Media flocked in from across the globe. But nobody's paid much attention to the 17 other people killed on the streets of San Bernardino in the first three months of this year. That's more than double the number of homicides this time last year -- pretty gruesome stats for a city of just over 200,000 people. Reporter: Steven Cuevas

'Chasing the Burn' for Morel Mushrooms in Lake County

Sometimes, when we revisit communities after a tragedy, we find something unexpectedly hopeful. Take Lake County, scorched by the monstrous Valley Fire last September, one of the most destructive fires in California history. In the town of Cobb, lone chimneys stick out of the rubble. Only foundations remain where homes used to be. The hills above were once thick with pine and fir trees. For the series California Foodways, Lisa Morehouse joined a group of foodies hunting for a delicacy that actually thrives after a devastating wildfire. Reporter: Lisa Morehouse

Conservationists Use Microphones and Big Data to Count Disappearing Frogs

Many people believe the red-legged frog is the amphibian in Mark Twain's first successful short story, "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." But it's now on the endangered species list. It was over-hunted; people loved to eat its legs. To get an accurate count of how few of these frogs are left, scientists in Santa Cruz are trying something new. They're teaming up with a tech company that specializes in big data and sound. Reporter: Sam Harnett

Quilts Help Stitch Together New Perception of East Palo Alto's Cooley Landing

Bay Area County Helps Offenders With Alternative to Paid Bail

For hundreds of years, people have paid bail -- putting up money or property as collateral to make sure defendants show up for trial. So the people who can pay get out of jail. And those who can't stay locked up sometimes for months or years, waiting for their day in court. We find out about an alternative that some California counties are trying out. As part of a new series focused on solutions for ending the cycle of incarceration and poverty, we look at what the end of money bail could mean. Reporter: Sukey Lewis

Meet the Naturalist Who Sang Like an (Actual) Bird

Charles Kellogg loved the giant redwood trees of California. He built a car out of a fallen redwood and nicknamed it the "Travel Log." He drove around the country campaigning for the protection of redwoods. But Kellogg had another passion: singing like an actual bird. In this episode of "The World According to Sound," Chris Hoff and Sam Harnett show us why this vaudeville performer was so famous for his bird songs. Reporter: Chris Hoff Reporter: Sam Harnett

Clinton or Sanders? A Generational Divide Among Black Voters

It's finally here. Californians are headed to the polls on Tuesday for the June primary. And the race between Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders looks like it will be very tight in California, so turnout is even more important than usual. African-Americans voted in record numbers in 2012 to help seal Barack Obama's re-election. But this time around, they're torn between Hillary and Bernie. Reporter: Scott Shafer

Field Poll Projects Record Mail Voting

Election Day is finally here in California and a Field Poll out this morning projects that around eight million voters will take part in today's primary, that's roughly 45% of registered voters. That falls short of the 2008 presidential primary when nearly 58% of registered voters cast ballots. The report also estimates that about five million Californians will vote by mail (that would be a new record) because more counties are eliminating in-person voting. That includes Plumas County in Northern California. Reporter: Ben Bradford.
