Some Locals Worry About USC's Plan for Biotech Expansion

We begin today in East Los Angeles, where the University of Southern California is working to make the area a hub for biotech research. A couple years ago the LA County Board of Supervisors agreed to develop a biotech master plan, one that would compete with similar efforts in San Francisco and San Diego. Reporter: Steven Cuevas.

Proposition 62 Backers: 'It's Time to End California's Death Penalty'

Supporters and opponents of California's capital punishment law agree on one thing: The death penalty system isn't working. The November ballot offers voters two completely different solutions. Proposition 62 would ban the death penalty in the state. Reporter: Scott Shafer.

Family of Slain Sacramento Man Pushes for Criminal Charges Against Officers

The family of an African American man killed by Sacramento police in July is calling for murder charges against the officers who shot him 14 times. They're also asking for a federal civil rights investigation by the Justice Department. Reporter: Julie Small.

For Some, Fixing the Death Penalty Means Speeding Up Executions

The death penalty evokes strong feelings for and against it. California has nearly 750 inmates on death row, but the last execution was more than a decade ago. Backers of capital punishment are supporting Proposition 66 in hopes of speeding up the legal appeals process so that death sentences are carried out more quickly. Reporter: Scott Shafer.

LAPD Releases Security Camera Video in Fatal Police Shooting

In Los Angeles, Black Lives Matter activists are rejecting the LAPD's assertion that officers fatally shot an 18-year-old man in South LA over the weekend only after he turned toward them with a gun. This despite security camera video that shows he was carrying a gun in the moments before the confrontation. Police released the video shortly before the police commission meeting that attracted dozens of protesters. Reporter: Frank Stoltze.

White House Pushes for More Firefighting Funds

Let's move now to forest fires, the US Forest Service show that 2016 was the second-costliest firefighting year in U.S. history. The final tab: 1.6 billion; only last year was more expensive. White House Office of Management and Budget Director Shaun Donovan says Congress hasn't given the Forest Service enough firefighting funds. Reporter: Guy Marzorati.

Showhorses vs. Workhorses: What Makes an Effective U.S. Senator?

Tonight's U.S. Senate debate night in Los Angeles will be the last chance to see Attorney General Kamala Harris and Orange County Congresswoman Loretta Sanchez face off against each other. It might help voters decide which they think is best to replace retiring Senator Barbara Boxer. And that got us thinking, what does it take to be a good U.S. senator anyway? Reporter: Matt Laslo.

Boxer, Feinstein Senate Endorsements Boost Kamala Harris

We begin with Kamala Harris. Her Senate candidacy got a big boost Thursday morning from two California political heavy weights. Senators Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer endorsed the California Attorney General to fill Boxer's seat. Their announcement came just hours after Harris faced off against her challenger for the Senate seat, Congresswoman Loretta Sanchez. Reporter: Katie Orr

Californians Slack Off on Water Conservation

Californians have been slacking off on water conservation. Statewide water savings fell by 10 percent in August compared to the same month last year. If conservation keeps dropping off, state officials say mandatory cuts could come back early next year. Reporter: Lauren Sommer

State Weighs Stronger Pesticide Regulations Around Kids

California may restrict the use of certain pesticides near children. Essentially, farmers wouldn't be able to spray within a quarter mile of schools and day care centers or during school hours. Some counties already restrict spraying. And some farmers have objected to more regulations. The state is taking public comment through Nov. 17. Reporter: Vanessa Rancano

L.A. Olympic Bid Moves Ahead with Less Competition, More Cost Assurances

The odds of Los Angeles becoming the host city for the 2024 Summer Olympic games improved after Rome dropped out of the running last month. But L.A. still has some hurdles to clear. Reporter: Steven Cuevas

Jerry Brown Pushes Earlier Release of Felons Under Proposition 57

Gov. Jerry Brown has a tough job in front of him. A federal court has ordered him to reduce the prison population. But Brown has to do that while keeping the public safe. So, to help get it done, Brown is asking voters to make it easier for thousands of inmates to get out of prison. Reporter: Marisa Lagos

Coachella Rock: Salton Sea Fault Line and Desert Trip

We end this week with two stories about geeking out over rock. Dr. Valerie Sahakian, a researcher with the U.S. Geological Survey and self-described "rock geek" authored a study detailing the discovery of a new fault line along the Salton Sea. And classic rock geeks will gather in Indio this weekend to hear greats like the Rolling Stones, Bob Dylan and Neil Young. Reporter: John Sepulvado

Meet the City Kid Turned Rodeo King

We begin our show today with bucking broncos, bull riding and roping -- in San Francisco. Later this month, the Grand National Rodeo will bring livestock shows to the city, just like it has for decades. But most spectators probably don't know that one man has produced this and nearly every other rodeo in the Golden State: Cotton Rosser. He's the owner of the Flying U Rodeo Company and a rodeo legend. Reporter: Lacy Jane Roberts

How Safe Is Safe Enough for a Self-Driving Car?

California is home to more vehicles than any other state. And it can be dangerous on the highway. More than 35,000 people died in crashes on U.S. roads last year. Most of the time, human error was to blame. Some California innovators think one remedy might be to let computers take the wheel. California is one of the first states testing self-driving cars. And now they're close enough to reality that regulators are sketching out policies for them, from safety to ethics. Some proposals include cars that don't even need a steering wheel, accelerator, or brake pedal. Reporter: Daniel Potter

5 Years After Occupy Oakland, Still Fighting for the 99 Percent

Five years ago this weekend, protesters set up a camp in front of City Hall in Oakland. Marchers took to the streets, shut down the Port of Oakland and clashed with police. Occupy Oakland became perhaps the most well-known encampment outside of Occupy Wall Street in New York. So where are those Occupiers now? We talk to some of them about participating in that protest changed their lives. Reporter: Andrew Stelzer

What Today's Artist-Activists Can Learn From the Black Panthers, 50 Years On

Oakland's been the birthplace for a lot of movements for social change over the years. In fact, the Black Panther Party for Self Defense celebrates its 50th anniversary this month. When it began in Oakland in the 1960s, the party wanted to tackle police brutality and racial discrimination. Sound familiar? These days, Bay Area artists are riffing off the Panthers' legacy to create art aimed at inspiring a modern day revolution. Reporter: Chloe Veltman

Californians Could Repeal Practice Sending Some Minors to Adult Court

In the year 2000, Californians passed a proposition allowing a district attorney to decide whether to try a juvenile as an adult. The practice is called direct file, and it was designed to combat a perceived surge in youth crime. Now, direct file is up for a vote this November as part of Proposition 57. Reporter: Laura Klivans.

Supreme Court to Hear Samsung Challenge in Apple Patent Case

Tech giant Samsung is having a really rough week, and it's only Tuesday. First, the company stops selling the replacements to the Galaxy 7 Note. Like the originals, those replacements were spontaneously catching fire. Then, Samsung's stock plunged eight percent. Now spontaneous combustion and stock sell offs are real world problems. But perhaps not as perilous as putting your future in the hands of a certain eight people in black robes. Samsung will be in front of the U.S. Supreme Court today. Reporter: Queena Kim.

Justice by Geography: Direct File Applied Differently Across Counties

Yesterday we told you about a practice called direct file. That's when a district attorney, not a judge, decides if a minor as young as 14 will go to adult court. Whether to return that decision to a judge is part of Proposition 57. Today we look at how it's used in one county: San Francisco. Despite its significant size, the county rarely uses direct file. Reporter: Laura Klivans.

In Secretive Marijuana Industry, Whispers of Abuse and Trafficking

This week, we hear about a secret world hidden in the forests of Northern California. We know marijuana cultivation is an unregulated industry, with people operating below the radar. But you may not know that women who work to trim the buds can wind up abused, sometimes even victims of sex trafficking. Would a ballot measure to legalize recreational marijuana help put a stop to sexual exploitation? California Attorney General and candidate for U.S. Senate Kamala Harris authorized the investigation. Reporter: Katie Orr.

Sacramento Politicos React to Final Presidential Debate

Let's go now to the final Presidential debate between Republican Donald Trump and Democrat Hillary Clinton. It was a night made for internet memes, as the GOP standard bearer turned the phrases "bad hombre" and "nasty woman" into instant catch phrases. Most of the TVs on the first floor of Midtown Sacramento's Bar West were tuned to playoff baseball. But that wasn't the case upstairs where journalists, public relations professionals and students gathered to watch the debate. Reporter: Katie Orr.

A Tale of Two Farm Towns: How the Central Valley Is Torn Over Marijuana

A lot is changing when it comes to marijuana in CA. We've got the state trying to comprehensively regulate medical pot for the first time. Plus it looks likely we'll legalize recreational marijuana in November. This got us wondering what it all means for the state's farm belt. Are cannabis fields going to replace almonds and tomatoes? Local leaders in struggling farm towns are trying to balance conservative values with the demand for new jobs. Reporter: Alice Daniel & Vanessa Rancano.

Proposed Regulations Could Protect Healthcare Workers from Physical Harm

Later today, the board that oversees CAL OSHA will vote on a host of new regulations for health care facilities. Hospitals, nursing and hospice homes, psychiatric facilities all could have new regulations aimed to protect workers from physical assaults by patients. This request from the unions came after real world tragedy. A psychiatric patient murdered a nurse at the Napa State Hospital. Reporter: Scott Shafer & Polly Stryker.

Winding Back the Clock: New Plan Would Remove Dams on the Klamath River

Given all the fighting we're seeing this election season, it's kind of amazing that many groups came together to find a compromise this spring and signed a plan that would demolish four aging hydroelectric dams along the Klamath River, near the California-Oregon border. Hundreds of miles of the Klamath would run free to the Pacific Ocean, opening up the largest river restoration in U.S. history. The plan took over a decade to negotiate, and it's now before federal regulators. Reporter: Molly Peterson.

Can Ecstasy Help Relieve Social Anxiety Epidemic Among Autistic People?

You've heard of Ecstasy. It's a party drug known for quashing inhibitions and making people feel in love with everyone around them. But researchers are finding that the main ingredient in ecstasy -- MDMA -- has potential to be a true medicine. Early studies show it can ease symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder. Now, a new pilot study in California is exploring MDMA as a treatment for social anxiety in autistic adults. We meet one of the study participants at her home in Los Angeles. My Spot: Counting Blessings on Devil's Slide

Imagine a dark and stormy night on the California coast. Boulders tumble from the sky. White-knuckled drivers pass from Santa Cruz to San Francisco on a windy road so treacherous that they call it "Devil's Slide." Well, that's the way it used to be. Highway 1 now bypasses Devil's Slide, and goes through a pair of well-fortified tunnels. And the old highway was transformed into a beautiful walking path with ocean views. For our "My Spot" series, we took a stroll out there with a local resident. Reporter: Eli Wirtschafter

San Diego's Chargers Stadium Measure Looks to Increase Taxes in the City

A local ballot measure in San Diego could change the sports economy in Southern California. Next week, San Diego voters will decide whether to increase a local tax to help build a stadium for the Chargers as well as a convention center. A no vote on Measure C could lead to a breakup between the city and the Chargers. And San Diego's NFL team isn't just flirting with leaving the city. They've basically hired a divorce attorney and started going on dates with Los Angeles. The NFL has given the team an open invitation to join the Rams in L.A. next year at the coliseum. An Iconic Album's Less-Than-Stellar Cover Art

Fifty years ago, the Beach Boys released the milestone album "Pet Sounds," a collection of groundbreaking songs that really redefined what pop music could be. In the decades since, critics and fans have scrutinized and analyzed every single aspect of the album's thirteen songs. But the album's genius was hardly represented by its incongruous sleeve art. The cover features only a snapshot of the band standing in a San Diego petting zoo, feeding goats. It almost seems like an afterthought, or a cheap joke. Can that really be true? Meet the 'Invisible' Faces of College Homelessness

A third of all community college students are either homeless or housing insecure, meaning a slight change in circumstances could leave them homeless. That's according to a new study from San Diego State University. Even before the study came out, college administrators across the state were trying to figure out how to address homelessness among the student population. Reporter: Laura Klivans.

L.A Mayor Eric Garcetti Rides Red Line to Reassure Public After Bomb Threat

Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti rode the train yesterday. Not a huge deal in itself, the Mayor says he likes to ride the Metro, but he was doing it in an effort to reassure the public, after the revelation of a bomb threat targeting the Universal City station. In response to the threat, local law enforcement and the F-B-I staffed increased patrols yesterday. Mayor Garcetti spoke with John Sepulvado about balancing public safety and maintaining a sense of calm - and about his ride on the Red Line. Reporter: John Sepulvado.
