Hartsfield-Jackson International's smoking rooms are now closed as the airport goes smoke-free indoors. The closure of the smoking lounges is to comply with a new city ordinance that bans smoking and vaping inside the airport, restaurants, bars, workplaces and many other public locations in Atlanta. The effective date was Jan. 2,

2020. The prohibition covers cigarettes, cigars and electronic cigarettes. Violating the smoke-free ordinance could result in a fine of up to $100 for a first violation and up to $200 for each additional violation within a year. Hartsfield-Jackson has a “30-day accommodation program” in the month of January in partnership with airport advertising contractor Clear Channel, which is getting 60,000 free packs of nicotine lozenges from distributor Perrigo. A number of airport shops and restaurants will also provide the nicotine lozenges for free to passengers who have “limited access to the exterior smoking zones.” Smoking is prohibited indoors at most of the 35 busiest airports in the United States.

Lawmakers head back to the Capitol for the 2020 legislative session. Legislative leaders get set to tackle some difficult budget cuts as Brian Kemp says he’d like to make good on more campaign promises, like his continued crackdown on gang members. Governor Kemp says it doesn’t matter if you’re in the big city like Atlanta or if you’re in Augusta or Savannah, gangs impact every corner of the state. This year he says he wants lawmakers to make it easier to prosecute gang members and human traffickers. Also, Governor Kemp says streamlining the adoption process is also a priority. As of last May, Georgia had nearly 14,000 children in foster care. He says we need to look again at foster care and see how we can streamline the adoption process, and try to find these kids loving homes. No doubt the budget will take center stage as lawmakers grapple with cuts due to a dip in state revenues. House speaker David Ralston says it’s important to remember the budget is more than just numbers and percentages, because those numbers represent programs that are important to Georgians.

8:30AM

In his State of the State Address, Governor Kemp said he wants to finish the job he started by making good on a campaign promise of $5000 teacher pay raises. Last year, lawmakers approved $3000 of it. This year’s $2000 raise will cost an estimated $360 million during tough budget times. Governor Kemp has asked state agencies for a four percent cut in the current budget and an additional six percent next year.

The Atlanta City Council unanimously voted to approve an independent Inspector General to help weed out corruption. There’s still a few more steps to go until this is final, but a big step is lawmakers who want a state takeover at Hartsfield-Jackson International are in session across the street. In the City of Atlanta, some major crimes were reported this week. Yet another shooting at Lenox Square looks like Atlanta Police interrupted an armed robbery in progress when they shot a man in the parking deck. The numbers, for what they’re worth, say overall crime is down, but murders, rape and aggravated assaults are up in Atlanta, and residents are frustrated. There’s a lot of finger pointing. The Atlanta Police blame the courts for letting repeat offenders out so soon. Fulton County courts say officers don’t show up for hearings. It’s going to take leadership to enable this to move forward.

Republican appointed Senator Kelly Loeffler now has two more opponents, Republican Doug Collins and Democrat Raphael Warnock. A lot of Republicans this week have been disappointed in Loeffler’s campaign rollout. She hasn’t defined herself and expressed why she wants to be senator. There’s no stronger supporter of President Trump than Doug Collins, so she’ll offer voters a different perspective. Senator Loeffler has many backers in Washington. She’ll definitely have the financial advantage, but will it be enough if voters don’t perceive her as authentic.

A huge, and perhaps expected, senate run announcement from Ebenezer Baptist Church’s Reverend Raphael Warnock. He talked about growing up in the projects of Savannah, how he made it, and the issues he would fight for, which includes healthcare and raising the minimum wage. He also has the backing of Stacey Abrams.

Less than a month from now, early voting begins in the presidential primary. In Athens, some voters raised concerns about privacy saying the text in the new machines was so large others could see who you’re voting for. Some board members also worry about whether there would be enough outlets for all the machines and printers at some precincts. Most of the panel have tested the machines and say that there are partitions between machines which would make it very obvious if someone is trying to look at another screen. At the end of the day, election officials want to make sure they get it right.

8:30AM

Governor Brian Kemp says Georgia has a “serious teacher retention problem,” and speaking during a visit to McEachern High School, he doubled-down on his promise to increase their pay. The governor’s proposed budget includes a $2000 bump for teachers across the state, the second and final installment of his $5000 pay increase, which was a campaign promise. Kemp’s remarks come the same week the general assembly scheduled more hearings to take a closer look at the budget.

2/23/20

The Dekalb County delegation meeting over ethics legislation was a heated one filled with accusations and name calling. There are 3 principles to follow when under the gold dome: the process, the negotiation, and then compromise. The controversy is over the makeup of the ethics board and the process of moving the bill forward. There’s always a major debate and controversy over ethics legislation because it’s always about power and who should oversee whom. The chair, the senate and the house delegations will come together with Dekalb to find out the best process to move forward.

8:30AM

Governor Brian Kemp announced this week that the state will be ready for whatever comes regarding the coronavirus. The governor says he’s had calls with President Trump’s team and is keeping in close contact with the state’s public health officials. At Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport, about 1000 people have been screened with 200 travelers agreeing to do home quarantine. Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport’s general manager says all screenings for the coronavirus have been orderly and effective. He says the airport has enough medical and customer service staff to handle expanding checks as people continue to fly in from all over the world.

Georgia is no doubt feeling effects of coronavirus without one case reported here in the state. The CDC this week had kind of a dire warning, saying it’s not a matter of if, but when, there are outbreaks all over the United States. There’s a fine line for officials, like Governor Kemp, who don’t want to cause a panic, but also wants Georgians to be prepared.

8:30AM

Georgia confronts its first case of coronavirus. A father who traveled to Italy and his home-schooled son have contracted the disease, reported in Fulton County. Public health experts expect to find more cases when additional testing begins. Governor Kemp is working with the CDC and other government agencies pointing out that we are low risk as Georgians as the disease has not become a pandemic. The scope of the disease is still questionable, especially since Atlanta houses the world’s largest airport. Right now, the state is in a wait-and-see mode.

8:30AM

The Governor’s office is reporting the first Georgia death due to the coronavirus, and the number of people diagnosed continues to increase. Everyone from the governor to Public Health Commissioner Kathleen Toomey to House and Senate leaders, and Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms, are all doing a really good job of keeping us informed. The Governor had a measured response, but said he was getting some criticism for opening up a state park to people who are infected with the virus but not in need of hospitalization. The governor also suggested schools and school districts should make the decision on their own whether they should close, making it clear that the order was not a mandate. But in metro Atlanta, most school districts took his suggestion seriously.

Sen. Brandon Beach tests positive with coronavirus days after he was diagnosed with bronchitis, and he has come under attack. He was at the Capitol just before the positive test, and he didn’t think much of it because he suffers with allergies and such during this time of year. In hindsight, he shouldn’t have gone. People need to stay home, wash their hands, and assume that everyone you come in contact with could potentially have the virus and could transfer it to you.

Governor Brian Kemp defends his decision NOT to order the entire state to shelter in place. The Governor has come under fire by many people for this decision. Governor Kemp says that he’s not the Governor of Atlanta or the metro area, and these decisions are difficult. There were 50 counties that don’t have a confirmed case of the coronavirus, but some Democrats are calling for a state lockdown before it gets worse. Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms said she would order the whole country to stay home if she could. She made the decision to order Atlantans to stay home, and other cities and counties have done the same. During the town hall meeting, Mayor Bottoms was careful not to criticize the Governor for his call. And, Governor Kemp said he supported cities and counties for making their own individual decisions.
