They assured the local residents of Antelope that they were there only to build a communal farm where they could live and work in harmony and love. Their leader was a Rolls Royce driving native of India known as the Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh who preached total sexual freedom and sported lavish gifts from his followers. His spokesperson and personal secretary was the fiery Ma Anand Sheela. Soon after settling in the followers, or Sannyasins, were challenging established land use laws and customs, and generating opposition from Oregonians statewide. They had plans to build a dam, an airstrip, a lake and huge greenhouses to produce food year round ? and to incorporate their own city, Rajneeshpuram, by any means possible. Their message of love and peace quickly soured. And the early tolerance afforded them by locals was gone. By 1983 rifle-carrying Sannyasins patrolled the ranch and guarded the hillsides. The conflicts and tensions continued to escalate with civil authorities and individuals bringing multiple lawsuits against the Rajneesh. Sheela fled to Europe and was arrested on several charges including attempted murder, burglary and arson and causing a salmonella outbreak in The Dalles. In the end the town of Rajneeshpuram imploded and the Bhagwan departed.

His work has received international attention from publications like the New York Times and Better Homes and Gardens. Jeffrey sees his work as a way to connect to nature. Irene Hardwicke Olivieri - Irene Hardwicke Olivieri lives in a house that's mostly off the grid, outside Sisters. Daily, she gets inspired by treasures she finds on morning walks, and in the mountains and wildlife around her. Her primary art is painting, but she'll draw, sketch, and use watercolors in an attempt to capture a feeling or an emotion that awakens her creative spirit. She also likes to take apart owl pellets and reassemble the skeletons she finds inside. We'll talk with her and spend time with her as she works. Francoise Weeks - Francois Weeks shapes dramatic fashion pieces using the greenest material she can find - plants! She's creating a dress and a dramatic head decoration for an upcoming fashion shoot, and shows us how she creates each piece from greenery and flowers.

"It's both technical and artistic," he says. We watch him create the original wax mold, made from measurements of the patient's eye. From that mold, he makes a white acrylic eyeball, then begins painting. Harwin believes the time he spends with the patient is an important part of the healing process. "They have lost something - I want to help make them whole again." Fueled by artistic passion and innate curiosity, Kindra Crick bases her work on scientific research. Using a confocal microscope, Crick and collaborator Dr. John Harkness capture photo images of neurons. Crick uses these images as the basis for her chalkboard series, exploring the biology of memory and encouraging her audience to ponder the mystery and awe of their existence. Furthermore, Crick's brain harbors special DNA. Her Grandfather, Francis Crick, is known for his discovery of the structure of the DNA double helix. Glass sculptor like you've never seen before! Eric Franklin creates full size human skeletons and skulls, then fills them with neon, argon, and other gasses, making them glow from within. Eclipse Highlights!

Thousands of people descend on the Garden to witness the eclipse of 2017, and experience not only the natural beauty, but see the permanent and temporary art installations in a brand-new way. William Hernandez paints wild, colorful scenes that highlight the surprising and the surreal. He studied classical painting at The National School of Fine Arts of Peru, one of the South America's most prestigious institutions. William moved to Oregon in 2009 but he keeps his connection to Peru alive through the vivid colors and characters in his paintings. He does no sketches or studies - instead, he attacks the canvas with paint, creating as he goes, often working on four or five paintings at a time. William's success continues to grow in the Northwest: he is now represented by galleries in both Portland and Seattle.

Almost 50 years after his death, Rothko's work continues to hold a powerful place in the art world. In 2012 one of his paintings, Orange, Red, Yellow, broke records at a Christie's auction, selling for over $86 million. Rothko has deep roots in Oregon. In 1913 he emigrated with his family from Latvia to Portland when he was 10 years old. Throughout his life Rothko continued to visit his many relatives in Portland, and Oregon landscapes are featured in his early works. Mark Rothko's son, Christopher, and a number of Rothko's Portland relatives granted extensive interviews for the making of this program. We travel to the National Gallery in DC plus the Whitney for conservator and curatorial interviews, and more. The stories range from Rothko's childhood selling newspapers in Portland, to finding his peer group of artists in New York, including Jackson Pollack and Willem DeKooning, to his transformational work helping birth a new, uniquely American art form.
