History	OEXP 0602	Oregon Experience	Modoc War	60 minutes	10/22/18 9:00 PM	OPB	Documentary	1	0:57:15	In 1873 in Fort Klamath, Oregon, four Modoc natives were hanged for war crimes. It was the only time Native Americans would face that charge. The execution came at the end of the costliest Native American war in U.S. history. The battle was over land. The Modocs of Southern Oregon and Northern California signed a treaty agreeing to live on a reservation. All they asked was that the reservation be on six square miles of their native homeland. Instead the U.S. government moved the Modocs onto a reservation with their enemies, the Klamaths. Led by Captain Jack, a band of less than 200 Modoc men, women and children fled the reservation and took refuge in along Tule Lake, at what is now Lava Beds National Monument. The area was a natural fortress. Over the next six months, fifty Modoc warriors held off over 600 U.S. soldiers, without a single Modoc casualty.
