Synopsis:	Tolls on the Pennsylvania Turnpike have officially been raised again. The turnpike's Carl Defebo says the commission lost $100 million from "toll-by-plate" drivers who didn't pay last year. The average toll will go up by 20 cents to $4.10. Defebo notes the Pennsylvania Turnpike paid off its whopping debt to the commonwealth for transportation, roads, and transit in the summer of 2021.

Synopsis:	Governor Kathy Hochul says she is worried New Yorkers could be evicted from their homes when the state's COVID-related eviction moratorium ends this weekend. Some tenants say they want to pay back rent, but just don't have the money. Landlords say some tenants are taking advantage of the pandemic. Hochul is asking the Biden Administration for financial help to make sure no one ends up out in the cold. The eviction moratorium was put in place by former Governor Andrew Cuomo at the height of the COVID crisis.

Synopsis:	A program that promoters say will help more than two million Pennsylvanians get a retirement savings plan is being considered in the state house. The new piece of legislation called Keystone Saves would be a state-sponsored retirement plan. Employers would make a payroll deduction into the IRA and keep track of those participating. The treasury and a third party would handle the rest. Businesses that already have retirement plans, those with fewer than five employees, and those open for fewer than 15 months would be exempt. It's believed the program would take about four years to phase in, if the idea gains approval in the legislature.

Synopsis:	Southern tier residents affected by summertime flooding...are finally getting help. Days after the Federal Emergency Management Agency said no for a second time, the U.S. Small Business Administration is stepping in to help residents and businesses in Steuben, Allegany, Chemung, Livingston, Ontario, Schuyler and Yates counties by providing low-interest loans to help them recover from flood damage triggered by Tropical Storm Fred in August, 2021. Steuben and Allegany counties were hit hardest by the flash flooding that resulted from the remnants of the tropical storm, causing an estimated $35 million in damage. An SBA loan outreach center is scheduled to open this week in Woodhull to help applicants navigate the lending process.

Synopsis:	A Binghamton University professor has been forced to back off from a controversial classroom policy that some criticized as unfair to white male students. In her course syllabus, Intro to Sociology Professor Ana Maria Candela stated she planned to practice what's known as "progressive stacking," whereby non-whites, women and those who are shy or quiet would get priority when raising their hands in class. But after word got out about Candela's plan, the university stepped in and forced the professor to back off and treat all of her students equally. In a statement, Binghamton University administrators said Candela's syllabus statement violated the faculty handbook's principals of effective teaching, which includes valuing and encouraging all student feedback.

Synopsis:	Hundreds of Bucknell University students walked out of class Monday at the Lewisburg, Pennsylvania campus to demand answers and accountability from the university administration and public safety. Organizer senior Jillie Santos told the Daily Item she's watched many of her friends suffer injustice only to go through the proper channels to seek recourse, and be met with more injustice. Santos claims the recently retired public safety chief at Bucknell destroyed evidence in a case involving a male student using his cell phone and invading the privacy of a female student in a dorm restroom. Bucknell says the safety and well-being of students is the university's top priority.

Synopsis:	Republicans in the General Assembly are demanding the Pennsylvania Education Department release student test results from 2021 to incorporate the data in budget and policy decisions. State House Speaker Bryan Cutler and House Education Committee Chair Curt Sonney penned a letter calling for the release of last year's Pennsylvania System School Assessment and "provide an explanation for the extensive delay of the public release of those results." Cutler contends that the education department's inaction fuels speculation about the student test data and argued parents deserve to know the impact the pandemic has had on learning.

Synopsis:	The publication of Pennsylvania state test results have been pushed back. The scores for the 2021 Pennsylvania System of School Assessment and Keystone Exams will now be released on Friday, three days later than originally indicated. School leaders are being blamed for the delay, after requesting more time to review their 2021 assessment data for accuracy. House Republicans have been pushing for the release of the scores to see measurable learning loss during the pandemic.

Synopsis:	Understanding your friend's depression. Part of the fallout of the COVID pandemic is that more Americans are battling depression. But before we try to help a friend in the middle of the struggle, there are some things we need to know. "I think some of the common misunderstandings are that everyone experiences depression the same way or looks the same way when they have depression. Or that every person finds help in the same way," says Dena Dyer, author of Wounded Women of the Bible and the recent Christianity Today blog post "Depression-Sufferers in Your Church Wish You Knew These Three Things." Giving suggestions or remedies—or telling people to have more faith—isn't helpful. "It creates some more shame and distance—that you're not really trying to be empathetic, although you might be trying to give an answer," she says. "What we really need is just empathy and understanding." Instead take time to connect and listen.

Synopsis:	Pennsylvania House Majority Leader Kerry Benninghoff is seeking the state high court's help to throw out the proposed legislative maps and order the "current" maps be used for state House and Senate elections in 2022. Benninghoff claims the newly prososed maps improperly maximize the number of Democrat-leaning districts and don't stick to constitutional criteria. The once-a-decade redistricting process decides the boundaries of 50 senate and 203 house seats in the Keystone State.

Synopsis:	Some Republicans are pleading with George Pataki to run for governor again. A website, "BringBackPataki.com" asks New Yorkers to sign a petition to show their support for the man who was governor of the Empire State from 1995 to 2006. Some in the GOP are concerned the candidates in the race for governor right now have little chance of knocking off Governor Hochul in the fall. The 76-year-old Pataki says he's flattered by the attention, but has no plans to mount a run for governor.

Synopsis:	A Johnstown, NY native is the latest to throw his hat into the ring in the race to become New York's next governor. Harry Wilson, who rose from a humble upstate upbringing to become a Harvard-educated millionaire businessman, becomes New York's fourth Republican gubernatorial candidate. The 50-year-old son of Greek immigrants says he's running to fix a state broken by rising crime, high taxes, closed schools and corrupt politicians. He touts his track record of turning around failing corporations as the experience needed to fix the Empire State. He says part of that plan would be to undo corporate and personal income tax hikes. The state GOP nominating convention starts Feb. 28.

Synopsis:	Pennsylvania Republican Congressman Fred Keller will not seek re-election. Keller, who has served in the House since 2019, says he doesn't want to challenge fellow GOP Rep. Dan Meuser for the seat. Keller's Congressional district near Harrisburg was affected by redistricting. He said in a statement, "with control of Congress and the direction of our nation at stake, this election is bigger than any one person." The announcement makes Keller the 14th Republican to say they won't seek another U.S. House term. More than thirty House Democrats have opted to not run in 2022.

Synopsis:	A one-time Upstate NY congressional candidate is raising eyebrows over her spending of political action committee funds. Last year, after losing for a second time to Republican Representative Elise Stefanik, Democrat Tedra Cobb started the Backroads Pac, saying it was to help rural Democrats like herself better compete. But the Albany Times-Union reports that, to date, less than $10,000 of the PAC's funds have gone to such candidates while Cobb has used it to provide herself with $18,000 in healthcare and $15,000 in political consulting fees, along with another $25,000 to a former campaign staffer. Most funds that did go to candidates were spent out of state. The report points out that there are few rules governing how PAC funds are spent, so the issues raised by Cobb's expenditures are more about ethics than the law.
