	Noticias al Minuto	12/30/2015	1:34 AM	:30	Topic: CALIFORNIA EQUAL PAY LAW For years, the state has required employers to pay equal pay to women and men doing the same job. Starting January 1, equal pay will be required for women and men who do "substantially similar work" -- regardless of how their jobs are formally described. The new law aims to change such disparities and prohibits employers from firing or otherwise retaliating against workers who talk about or disclose the pay of coworkers to other employees. A national equal pay law has been on the books for more than 50 years, and California has had its own state law version for decades. But the laws made it difficult for workers to prove pay discrimination.

Wilson says the company uses one supplier for those vegetables in the chicken salad sold in all its U.S. stores. He says one additional test is needed to confirm that the vegetables carried the same E-Coli strain connected with the outbreak. Wilson identified the supplier as Taylor Farms in Salinas, California. Phone calls to the company did not get answered on Wednesday afternoon. A message left with the FDA was not immediately returned.

	Noticias al Minuto	12/1/2015	7:46 PM	:30	Topic: SUPREME COURT OPENS WAY TO DECIDE ON IMMIGRATION EXECUTIVE ORDER The high court on Tuesday granted the 26 states challenging President Obama's executive actions on immigration just eight extra days to respond to the administration's appeal. The extension is a far cry from the full 30 days that the states initially requested, which was seen as a delay tactic designed to punt the issue into 2017 and run out the clock on Obama's final term in office. The states challenging the executive actions now have until Dec. 29 to file briefs opposing Supreme Court review. And though the timeline is tight, it gives a narrow opening for the court to decide by mid-January whether to take up the case. If the justices determine that the case warrants review, oral arguments would then follow in April, with an ultimate decision coming by late June. The lives of nearly 5 million undocumented immigrants hang in the balance while the issue works its way through the courts. The executive measures would have built on an existing program known as DACA, which offers some undocumented immigrants temporary work status and a shield from deportation. The new programs would have expanded the pool of eligible Dreamers (undocumented immigrants brought to the U.S. as kids) and the undocumented parents of U.S.-born citizens and legal permanent residents.

Education / Common Core	Noticias al Minuto	10/28/2015	12:30 PM	:30	STANDARDIZED TEST SCORES IN MATH GO DOWN For 25 years, through four presidential administrations, U.S. schools could rely on one small truth: Math scores on the National Assessment of Educational Progress, or NAEP test, always went up. Not this year. The latest results of the biennial tests, given to thousands of students and nicknamed "The Nation's Report Card," show a first-ever drop in math scores for the randomly selected students in both fourth- and eighth-grade who took them earlier this year. U.S. Education Secretary Arne Duncan acknowledged that the news "isn't great," but said the dip "doesn't come as a big surprise." Authorities cautioned against reading too much into the development, saying that one downturn does not a trend make. The new scores, released Wednesday by the National Center for Education Statistics, show the average fourth- and eighth-grade math scores declined two and three points, respectively, between 2013 and 2015. The average eighth-grade reading score dropped three points. Fourth-grade reading scores were essentially unchanged.

	Noticias al Minuto	10/26/2015	1:25 PM	:30	DONALD TRUMP LOW FAVORITISM AMONG HISPANICS Republican front-runner Donald Trump is widely unpopular among the nation's Hispanics, a new AP-GFK poll finds, challenging the billionaire's oft-repeated assertion that he will win the Hispanic vote if he becomes his party's nominee. The survey finds many of the Republican candidates running for president would probably struggle to win significant support among Hispanics in a general election. Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio are their favorites, but even they are a hard sell, the poll suggests. Even so, most in the field are unknown to enough Hispanics that they might have a shot at proving themselves. That's a particular struggle for Trump, who began his campaign for president by calling some immigrants from Mexico rapists and has vowed to deport all of the estimated 11 million people living in the country illegally if he is elected president. Trump is viewed unfavorably by 72 percent of Hispanics, with 6 in 10 having a very unfavorable opinion of him, the AP-GFK poll finds. Only 11 percent view him favorably.

	Noticias al Minuto	12/31/2015	2;33 pm	:30	Topic: OBAMA GUN REGULATIONS President Barack Obama's bid to assert himself in his final year will begin with long-awaited executive actions on gun control, expected to be released next week, shortly after he returns to Washington. The White House is putting finishing touches on several measures in an effort to make progress on curbing gun violence, an issue the President and close aides have found frustratingly intractable, before the race to replace him enters prime time. According to gun industry insiders and others familiar with the proposals, the changes include requiring an expanded number of small-scale gun sellers to be licensed - and therefore conduct background checks - whenever selling a weapon. This wouldn't close the so-called gun show loophole, though it has the potential to narrow it. The administration is also expected to impose tighter rules for reporting guns that get lost or stolen on their way to a buyer. Neither comes close to the stronger gun control measures Obama sought in the wake of the 2012 mass shooting of schoolchildren in Sandy Hook and that he has said he still wants. But with Congress unlikely to approve any new gun curbs before the 2016 election, the measures are in line with what gun-control advocates were hoping would be adopted before Obama leaves office.

Whole milk sales shrunk. It was banned from school lunch programs. Purchases of low-fat dairy climbed. Whether this massive shift in eating habits has made anyone healthier is an open question among scientists, however. In fact, research published in recent years indicates that the opposite might be true: millions might have been better off had they stuck with whole milk. Scientists who tallied diet and health records for several thousand patients over ten years found, for example, that contrary to the government advice, people who consumed more milk fat had lower incidence of heart disease. After all the decades of research, it is possible that the key lesson on fats is two-fold. Cutting saturated fat from diets, and replacing them with carbohydrates, as is often done, likely will not reduce heart disease risk. But cutting saturated fats and replacing them with unsaturated fats - the type of fats characteristic of fish, nuts, and vegetable oils - might.

	Noticias al Minuto	10/12/2015	8:30 PM	:30	U.S IS PAYING MEXICO TO KEEP PEOPLE FROM REACHING THE In the past 15 months, at the request of President Obama, Mexico has carried out a ferocious crackdown on refugees fleeing violence in Central America. The United States has given Mexico tens of millions of dollars for the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30 to stop these migrants from reaching the United States border to claim asylum. Essentially the United States has outsourced a refugee problem to Mexico that is similar to the refugee crisis now roiling Europe. Beginning in July 2014, Mexico redirected 300 to 600 immigration agents to its southernmost states, and conducted over 20,000 raids in 2014 on the freight trains migrants ride on top of, and the bus stations, hotels and highways where migrants travel. In a sharp departure from the past few years, in the first seven months of fiscal 2015, Mexico apprehended more Central Americans - 92,889 - than the 70,448 apprehended by the United States. This year, Mexico is expected to apprehend 70 percent more Central Americans than in 2014, while United States apprehensions are projected to be cut by about half, according to a Migration Policy Institute study last month.

This is an attempt to reduce the number of abuses and complaints towards the immigrant community. From the creation of the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection in 2003, complaints and allegations of abuse by their agents against illegal immigrants have increased. Since then, lawyers and pro-immigrant groups have sought to bring about changes to curb the problem.
	Noticias al Minuto	11/3/2015	2:25 PM	:30	THOUSANDS OF SALVADORAN UNDOCUMENTED IMMIGRANTS FEEL THAT THEY ARE IN "LEGAL LIMBO" Close to 6,000 Salvadorans in the US feel that they are in a migratory bureaucratic limbo as most of them requested their TPS status to be renewed and 7 years later have not seen a change. USCIS had extended an automatic renovation that lapsed on September 9, so according to lawyers, those persons have no work permits, or other legal safeguards. The problem affects many immigrants in metro areas such as Houston, Texas where those affected cannot work because their permits are expired. In Los Angeles, some of the immigrants that renewed their TPS got a B19 card which amounts to a supervision order. USCIS says that as soon as October 5 they will start awarding the (EAD) cards, something they say should be completed by December.

But not a single child has entered the United States through the Central American Minors program since its establishment in December, in large part because of a slow-moving American bureaucracy that has infuriated advocates for the young children and their families. More than 5,400 children, most of them trying to escape street gangs, extortion and sexual assault in El Salvador, have applied to join their parents, who are already in the United States legally. So far the Department of Homeland Security has interviewed only 90 of them, and lengthy procedures for getting airplane tickets and processing paperwork have delayed those whose applications were approved.

The law forbids them to re-enter the U.S. for 10 years, and the measure is a difficult option for families that risk physical division. Now, an imminent change on the "punishment law" provides legal residents the benefit by soliciting an early pardon waiver, which means that once the pardon is issued, they are interviewed for resident status. This can gradually benefit children of legal residents and parents of U.S. citizens. Before, they could not request legalization through their legal sons or daughters for fear of being punished with the "10 year penalty". The new norms have yet to be written, but last September the INS ended a period of public hearings regarding the measure.

Immigration Detention Centers/ Santa Clara Prison	Noticias al Minuto	10/6/2015	11:31 AM	:30	NEW GUIDELINES FOR DETENTION CENTERS The U.S. Customs and Border Protection on Monday issued a sweeping new set of standards for handling immigrant detainees, following a year of heightened criticism over agency practices. The 31-page document--the first of its kind of the parent agency of the Border Patrol--describes acceptable procedures for nearly 100 situations, and addresses the biggest pegs for recent controversy: adequate feeding, tolerable air temperature and cleanliness in detention facilities. The handling of immigrant detainees came to public attention especially through heavy media coverage of the summer 2014 surge of unaccompanied children seeking asylum in the United States. Most traveled from Central America to the Texas border, fleeing violence and poverty at home. This summer saw increased immigrant traffic at the Texas border, Gov. Greg Abbott said in September, with nearly 10,000 families or unaccompanied children caught crossing the Texas border in August.

In those centers close to 35,000 undocumented immigrants are being held awaiting legalization of their status. Not only are there verbal and physical abuses, but, centers are warned about upcoming inspections. ICE maintains that they have a duty to guarantee fair human treatment of detainees. Those who have lived in those centers insist that the food they were served was bad, medical care was bad and there is deficient heat during winter time.

A panel of three judges expanded the number of immigrants who can receive bond hearings after six months in detention. The panel, which covers nine states in the western United States, also said immigrants held more than a year should receive such hearings every six months in which the government will have to demonstrate why they should remain prisoners. 	Noticias al Minuto	11/5/2015	2:22 PM	:30	THE ICE/CAP DEPORTATION PROGRAM COULD BE TARGETING CERTAIN SPECIFIC NATIONALITIES That is the conclusion reached by the American Immigration Council. Mexicans, Hondurans and Guatemalans make up the greater number of undocumented immigrants of criminal foreigners deported by ICE. Between 52 and 59 percent of the undocumented U.S. population is Mexican, 78% of those deported via CAP are Mexican. Hondurans are 5% of the undocumented immigrants in the U.S. but are 6.3% of those deported. Legal experts notice a racial pattern against those three nationalities. Activists say that it may have to do with the geographic proximity of those countries to the US, but say that it has to do with money to increase budget for more deportation and private detention centers. 30% of undocumented immigrants are of other nationalities, but only make up 5.1% of those deported.

	Noticias al Minuto	12/24/2015	7:41 PM	:30	Topic: ICE PREPARING FOR 2016 RAIDS AND DEPORTATIONS The Department of Homeland Security has begun preparing for a series of raids that would target for deportation hundreds of families who have flocked to the United States since the start of last year, according to people familiar with the operation. The nationwide campaign, to be carried out by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents as soon as early January, would be the first large-scale effort to deport families who have fled violence in Central America, those familiar with the plan said. More than 100,000 families with both adults and children have made the journey across the southwest border since last year, though this migration has largely been overshadowed by a related surge of unaccompanied minors. The ICE operation would target only adults and children who have already been ordered removed from the United States by an immigration judge, according to officials familiar with the undertaking, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because planning is ongoing and the operation has not been given final approval by DHS. The adults and children would be detained wherever they can be found and immediately deported. The number targeted is expected to be in the hundreds and possibly greater.

A growing movement across the nation tries to harness that bond to identify and prevent domestic violence, a pervasive problem that victims are often too ashamed to reveal to law enforcement or other public officials. The Cut It Out initiative based in Chicago has trained 40,000 salon workers in all 50 states to recognize signs of domestic abuse. In the past few months, the Cut It Out program was also adopted by the Empire Education Group, which has 87 cosmetology schools, and endorsed by the American Association of Cosmetology Schools, the trade organization representing another 800 schools. Nearly 600,000 women and girls and 144,000 men and boys nationwide were victims of violence by an intimate partner in 2006, according to the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics. In New York last year, the police received hundreds of domestic disturbance calls every day and recorded about 55,000 crimes connected to domestic violence.
