Program: Context Program: Community Matters
Subject: False Alarm
Aired: 1/22, 2/24, 2/226
Time: 7:00 p.m.
Duration: 28:30

Today's show looks at what Hawaii needs to do to insure that another false alarm does not send the residents and guests of Hawaii into a panic. A Hawaii employee who mistakenly sent an alert warning of an incoming ballistic missile earlier this month, creating panic across the state, thought an actual attack was imminent, federal regulators said Tuesday. The revelation from the Federal Communications Commission is the first indication that the alert was purposely sent, adding another level of confusion to the Jan. 13 false alarm. State officials have only said it was sent in error. The FCC said the state Emergency Management Agency has already taken steps to try to avoid a repeat of the false alert, requiring more supervision of drills and alert and test-alert transmissions. It has created a correction template for false alerts and has stopped ballistic missile defense drills until its own investigation is done.
