Ukraine - Children	K-LOVE's Positive People	May	Monthly Feature Various	Weekly Promo 60 seconds Podcast 15:58	Led By Determined Ohioan Sherri McClurg, 'New Horizons for Children' Protects the Vulnerable in Ukraine Ohio-Based New Horizons for Children has operated in Ukraine since 2009. When the prospect of a Russian invasion seemed likely in February, Executive Director Dr. Sherri McClurg traveled to Ukraine to see what could be done. “The plans were to go over before the war to be preventative. How can we help our orphanages? Are there any schools we need to evacuate to get children to a safer area in Ukraine? So that was all in the works - and the war broke out while I was there. Very overwhelming!” When it became clear the war was not going to be swift and done, “It quickly changed to which schools do need to evacuate? Which ones can we evacuate? It was the middle of a war zone, right, so we were spending time in bunkers, and it was getting really, really, scary and there were distinct moments that really stand out to me where I was just like, ‘Lord, what are we doing here?’... ‘Lord, I’m ready to go home!’ When I get out of this bunker, I’m out of here.” But Sherri shares the next morning God showed her just what his plan was for her. Representatives from the Ukrainian military asked to meet “and in that conversation they asked if what we were

					doing with these few, we need to do with a lot of children. And would you stay and partner with us to evacuate children from the east (eastern Ukraine) and move them to the west?" The local government realized the care and professionalism Sherri's team offered and they wanted to expand that to help even more children in orphanages and boarding schools flee the immediate war zone.

Ukraine - Children	K-LOVE's Positive People	May		So far, working with their partner Aerial Recovery, they have taken in 1,200 children to the western side of the country. And that number is growing. "These children, they're all in institutional care. They've all had complex developmental traumas throughout their life. They have trauma that they're already carrying. Now we're pulling them out of these war-torn regions." Her desire is to keep the kids in their own country where they know the culture and the language. Knowing the sheer number of Ukrainians - in the millions - who have crossed the border into Poland, Romania, and Moldova and the risks facing children, human traffickers for example, Sherri is getting considerable help from the area government to find good buildings to safely secure the children inside Ukraine. She believes many of the children who have crossed the border may never return to Ukraine. "We're bringing in blankets and bedding and medicine and providing medical care." "So, the whole point of the safe havens was to just stop some of the chaos and some of those additional traumas and just create a space to breathe." Realizing the potential for intensified war to come to western Ukraine, "All of the safe havens are very close to the border, and we have emergency plans in place if we

					need to emergency-evacuate all the kids across the border, we can do that.” Looking ahead, the need will continue in different ways for years. “When this conflict resolves, lots of these schools have been blown up. There’s no place for these children to even go back to. And what is this going to look like and what do we need to do? It’s one thing to create a temporary shelter that’s safe and warm and takes care of our needs right now, but these are children, and they’ve got a lot more needs than just this moment of getting them safe.”
