	NOTICIERO UNIVISION EDICION NOCTURNA	11/7/2017	10:35 PM	2:05	An announcement expected Monday from the Department of Homeland Security will determine the fate of some 57,000 Hondurans and 2,500 Nicaraguans who have been living in the United States under a form of provisional residency known as Temporary Protected Status (TPS). Another 200,000 Salvadorans and 50,000 Haitians also anxiously await the decision, as DHS must decide in coming weeks what to do with TPS recipients from those countries whose legal residency will expire early next year. An administration official said Monday an announcement would be "coming shortly," without giving further details. TPS recipients and their families are bracing for bad news. Last week Secretary of State Rex Tillerson sent a letter to DHS essentially giving the agency a green light to remove the immigrants' protected status, telling them that conditions in Central America and Haiti no longer required them to be exempted from deportation.

The decision will affect thousands of Nicaraguans living in the US, who will have to seek "an alternative lawful immigration status" or leave the US. The Temporary Protected Status (TPS) designation for Nicaragua was introduced in 1999 after Hurricane Mitch devastated Central America. It has been repeatedly renewed since. Both the Bush and Obama administrations argued that Central American nations which were granted TPS after Hurricane Mitch could not cope with the return of thousands of their nationals and extended the programmer's duration.
	NOTICIERO UNIVISION NOCTURNA	11/30/2017	10:35 PM	1:59	Secretary of state, Rex Tillerson, sent a letter to the secretary of National Security, Elaine Duke, in which he reports that the conditions that had always made TPS necessary in the countries of Central America and Haiti, no longer merit a migratory truce for the undocumented of those countries. The Washington Post obtained a copy of the letter and says Tillerson's position has not been made public.
	DESPIERTA AMERICA	12/18/2017	7:00 AM	:22	Some 57,000 Hondurans are deadlines until February 13 to rein scribe in the Temporary Protection Status Program. HEALTH-Stay healthy during cold and flue season
	DESPIERTA AMERICA	11/30/2017	9:00 AM	:28	The upcoming flu season may be a particularly severe one in the U.S., some medical experts warned today, citing preliminary data from the Southern Hemisphere's waning flu season. The flu vaccine used this year in Australia -- which has the same composition as the vaccine used in the U.S. -- was only 10 percent effective, according to a preliminary estimate, at preventing the strain of the virus that predominantly circulated during the country's flu season, experts wrote in a perspective published today in the New England Journal of Medicine.

	NOTICIERO UNIVISON	12/27/2017	5:30 P.M	2:07	The US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) today warned clinicians that flu activity has increased significantly in recent weeks, much of it from H3N2, which poses a heightened threat, especially to seniors and young children, and elevates the importance of prompt antiviral treatment. At the global level, H3N2 is still the dominant strain, but different regions are seeing a lot of illness from influenza B and 2009 H1N1 viruses, the World Health Organization (WHO) said in its latest update. In a Health Alert Network (HAN) notice, the CDC said predominant H3N2 activity has major implications for clinical treatment, given that the vaccine is generally less effective against that subtype, and that neuraminidase inhibitors, such as (oseltamivir) Tamiflu, will be a useful treatment adjunct. Past H3N2-heavy seasons have been marked by more hospitalizations and deaths in those over age 65 and in younger children, the CDC said. It added that seasonal flu vaccines have shown less protection against H3N2 than the 2009 H1N1 and influenza B strains, and if H3N2 continues to dominate, the efficacy against H3N2 could be near the 32% seen last season.
