Crawford Media Group's Tron Simpson talked with Douglas Bruce, author of Colorado's TABOR amendment (Taxpayer's Bill of Rights), approved by voters over three decades ago. Bruce educated listeners about Proposition HH, a measure earmarked for the November ballot that proposes to reduce future TABOR refunds in order to lower current property taxes.

"But, the proposal also allows the State of Colorado to collect and spend up to $10 billion more than TABOR allows over the next decade, resulting in what I see as a blatant bait-and-switch," said Bruce, "And I'm going to do his damndest to bring it down."

"The issue for the next six months is to get everybody to understand that the government is trying once again to rip them off," he says. "They need to vote against Proposition HH, and need to take people to the polls and make sure their neighbors are alert to the fact that this is a multi-billion-dollar scam."

In her book, Why Curse the Darkness When You Can Light a Candle, Garibay chronicles the journey of American Heritage Girls from its beginnings. AHG has now been celebrating 28 years serving young girls with its faith-based, scout-type leadership development program that offers hands-on badge programs, service projects, leadership opportunities, outdoor adventures, virtual connections, and more.

"I felt that the Girl Scouts organization was positioning itself for a progressive agenda," she said. Garibay thought that American Heritage Girls was going to be small, with just a couple groups with her daughter and friends. Today, the organization has grown nation-wide.

Crawford Media Group's Mike Triem talked with Becca Martin, principal technician for a new spinal cord stimulator, ANEUVO Exastim, now in clinical trials. The device does not require a surgical procedure, and is designed to provide non-invasive spinal cord neuromodulation therapy to increase the quality of life for people living with a spinal cord injury. This device is being tested in more than a dozen cities, including Craig Rehabilitation Hospital in Denver.

"What makes this device unique is that it gives patients 16 options they are able to control, not only the location of the stimulation (towards the head, towards the tail, to the right, to the left, etc.), but also provide multiple kinds of electrical currents to address multiple issues," said Martin. "In short, it repairs the connection of the spinal cord to the brain, therefore, the brain and the muscles are able to communicate. The overall goal is to restore motion that was lost due to a spinal cord injury."
