Indeed, Bull is based on the experiences of none other than "Dr. Phil" McGraw, who was a trial consultant himself before becoming a famous TV shrink.) Still, Bull's methods—both above and below board—are at times ethically troubling (perhaps a bit like Michael Weatherly, the guy who plays him. He was recently accused of sexual harassment, leaving the future of Bull unknown). Even though Bull always knows who's guilty or innocent, his ability to get jurors to reach that same conclusion can be bothersome and sometimes flat-out illegal. This CBS procedural turns the legal process into a contest in which the guy with the best stats, most computers and the least ethical qualms wins.
