Poudre Schools Recommended To Close

Mike Hooker
Reporting

(CBS4) FORT COLLINS, Colo. The Poudre School District in Fort Collins is one step closer to doing away with junior high schools. They could soon become middle schools and the superintendent planned to recommend the

The recommendation was to change middle schools and four year high schools starting two years from now. Colorado has already made.

Some parents are watching this proposal extra closely because they have two children who would be in junior high schools.

Three of Sue Hoenig's four children go to Riffenburgh Elementary School. Tessa and Erik would both switch to new grade configuration when they reach sixth and ninth grades.

"For my ninth grader, it makes sense to me, they're freshmen," Hoenig said. "It's part of their transition."

Hoenig said she's more concerned about moving sixth graders out of the close-knit community of the

"The longer I can keep them in that situation the better," Hoenig said.

But the superintendent said sixth graders will have more opportunities in a middle school and be with
The argument for four-year high schools is that students' high school transcripts begin in ninth grade

"Are ninth graders ready? What do we do with the ones who are not?" School Board President Jana L rate? What do we do about advanced classes?"

Ley said there's plenty of resistance to changing an already successful school district.

"Some folks said if it's not broke, don't fix it," Ley said. "You can always strive for excellence in what how can we get better."

Hoening said the unsettling part is being among the first to make the change to what the rest of Color

"Would I prefer that my kids weren't the first ones making that change? Yes, I would prefer that, but

The change would make small elementary schools smaller. Two high schools need students and addi

The school board won't vote on the issue for another 2 weeks.

CSU Experts Share Views On Buying Organic Good Question: When Does It Pay To Buy Organic?

Alan Gionet

(CBS4) FORT COLLINS, Colo. While the amount of organic food sold has been growing rapidly in recent years, consumers are still asking about whether it really matters when it comes to limiting the intake of pesticides in your food.

There are a lot of reasons to choose organic food.

"I think environmentally it's still important to go organic," shopper Amy Lavender told CBS4.

Lavender buys organic whenever it's available, but availability can be limited.

At Whole Foods in Fort Collins they stock anywhere from 40 to 70 percent organic produce, depending on the season.

Researchers have studied the issue of organic food and pesticide for years. Recent studies show that some fruits and vegetables are likely to have more pesticides when they make it to your table, others, have less.

The non-profit group Environmental Working Group recently came out with a list of 43 fruits and veg

Ken Sankey said it was a Sunday evening when his daughter had taken his four-year-old Yorkshire terrier to the park. The dog was attacked by a Pit Bull in his own driveway.

Sankey said Toby was his best friend.

"He was everybody's friend," Sankey said. "He and I, living in the house here, wherever I went, the dog was always with me. It's an old man shouldn't be crying, should he?"

Sankey said the pit bull's owner left the scene after the dog bit, and killed Toby.

"This guy comes by on roller blades with the dog on the leash. (The pit bull) lunged and tore the leash up and grabbed my dog," Sankey said. "He grabbed him right by the head. It happened so fast; one and the next he's laying dead with blood running out of him. That's hard to take."

What made it even worse, Sankey said, is that the pit bull's owner fled.

"That dog has got to be found and put down," Sankey said.

That's proving difficult. The Larimer Humane Society said it investigated a neighbor whose dog Sank provided a confirmed alibi.

Physical Therapy For Pets Becomes More

Mike Hooker
Reporting

(CBS4) LOVELAND, Colo. Many people consider their dogs full-fledged members of the family so it's starting to look more like the kind people get.

At Colorado Veterinary Wellness Center in Loveland, many of the physical therapies for pets are taken. The center's director said there's still a big difference between treating people and animals.

"Our patients can't talk to us," said Dr. Kara Keesling with the wellness center. "They can't tell us what they need."

A dog who lost a leg to cancer, gets massages and laser treatments as part of his treatment to walk again.

Another patient, "Tonka", was recovering from back surgery.

"The majority of the patients that I see in this facility, are post-operative patients and they usually have had surgery or injury," said Dr. Keesling.

While recovering from a knee surgery, "Riley" regularly gets coached through his canine comeback.

"He just needed to come back and start using his legs a little bit better, increase his muscle girth, increase his balance on his hind end," said Sharon Sweigart, Riley's therapist.

Dr. Keesling said it's not difficult convincing pet owners that physical therapy would be good for their physical therapy themselves.

At the Loveland wellness center, many animals go twice a week for 10 sessions.

A 40 minute therapy session at the center in Loveland costs $58.

Note: Reporter Mike Hooker located the center mentioned in the story about for a CBS4 viewer on Denver. The rehab clinic changed their name, but now I'm finding them – and Dr. Kara Keesling – listed as Veterinarian. Their phone number is (970) 278-0668. The Web site is vcavsnc.com.

UNC Ex-Punter Pleads Not Guilty To Stab Trail Set For Cozad

By Pat Graham, AP Sports Writer

Michelle Griego
Reporting

(AP) GREELEY, Colo. A former Northern Colorado backup punter accused of stabbing the starter pleads attempted murder and assault.

Mitch Cozad of Wheatland, Wyo., is accused of leaving a 3- to 5-inch deep gash in Rafael Mendoza's forehead. Police have said they believe Cozad stabbed Mendoza in an attempt to get the starting job, and the assault by Tonya Harding's hit man on Nancy Kerrigan.

Cozad remains free on $500,000 bail. If convicted, he could face up to 48 years in prison.

A judge on Monday scheduled the trial for July 30.

Cozad's lawyer, Joseph Gavaldon, said he is open to discussing a plea agreement with prosecutors.

"We'll see if we're going to trial," Gavaldon said outside the courtroom. "As of today, we are."

District attorney spokeswoman Jennifer Finch said prosecutors had no comment.

Cozad appeared in court in a black suit and silver-stripped tie. He waived his right to a formal arraigh

Horses Found Buried On Man's Weld Cou Beattie Already Arrested For Animal Cruelty

Mike Hooker
Reporting

(CBS4) ~~PLATTEVILLE, Colo.~~ A man arrested for animal cruelty in Weld County could face more charges. Troy Beattie, 39, was arrested more than 2 weeks ago at his home near Platteville.

Weld County Sheriff's Department investigators haven't said how many dead horses were found. The but fewer than 10 that were buried.

Authorities said they uncovered the horses' bodies on a farm in the 17,000 block of Weld County Road search warrant to look for dead horses and arrived with a backhoe and crane.

Beattie owns the property.
