Section I. Issues

The station has identified the following issues as significant issues facing our community in this quarter.

A: Psychology: With the economy taking a major hit due to the COVID-19 pandemic, people looking for work, looking to advance in their current career, or looking to profitably invest need to sharpen their decision making, creative thinking, financial management, and risk management skills.

B: Food Science: Plant-based meat substitutes are becoming increasingly available and popular in Texas, and actual lab-grown meat could be next. People need to know the science behind that meat and what it could mean for their nutrition and the economy.

C: Homelessness: Bell County is not immune to homelessness. There are steps we can take to help those in need or find help if we find ourselves in poverty.

D: Environmentalism: Central Texas' population continues to rise, meaning more housing and business developments are being constructed to meet demand. New innovations in construction techniques could help soften the environmental impact of constructing and maintaining new buildings.

E: Personal Finance: Millions of Americans, including many here in Texas, live together as husband and wife despite never being formally married. They should be aware of laws governing what happens to money and property if their relationship ends or one of them passes away, as well as steps necessary to have their co-habitation recognized by the law.

F: Education: As the COVID-19 pandemic continues, local school districts are offering online lessons to students in order to help slow the spread of the virus. Central Texas parents and students are having to adjust to this "new normal", and can use advice on how to keep students engaged during at-home learning and information about available resources to help.

G: Health: COVID-19 cases have remained steady in Bell County, and with children returning to school and businesses reopening, it's important that citizens know how they can protect themselves and help slow the spread of the virus.
