Subject: All words matter

How sad it is that guilt caves into the extremism which distorts the very reality we live in. So now "working hard" and "all lives matter" triggers for racism? How bizarre. It is perfectly natural when hearing "Basketball matters" to think and say "Ok, but all sports matter, don't they?" just as it is to hear "Black Lives Matter" and to think and say "ok, but All Lives Matter," because they do. So do you and the BLM movement deny that all lives matter, or is it only the black ones that matter? Why have we allowed the racists to co-opt the language of equality? That seems pretty racist. I for one refuse to give in, since if a racist were to say $2+2=4$, that doesn't make everyone who says it a racist, just like wearing buttons doesn't make one an oppressive soldier and wearing a red bandana doesn't make one a Blood, but both of these are real examples of prejudice based on special interest groups co-opting everyday objects which have distorted our ability to reason. Think about the words - they mean exactly what they say. All lives matter, including black lives, white lives, and broadcasters' lives.

You owe Grant Napear and much of American an apology.
