Ms. McVie's commercial potency, which hit a high point in the 1970s and '80s, was on full display on Fleetwood Mac's "Greatest Hits" anthology, released in 1988, which sold more than eight million copies: She either wrote or co-wrote half of its 16 tracks. Her tally doubled that of the next most prolific member of the band's trio of singer-songwriters, Stevie Nicks. (The third, Lindsey Buckingham, scored three major Billboard chart-makers on that collection.)

The most popular songs Ms. McVie wrote favored bouncing beats and lively melodies, numbers like "Say You Love Me" (which grazed Billboard's Top 10), "You Make Loving Fun" (which just broke it), "Hold Me" (No. 4) and "Don't Stop" (her top smash, which crested at No. 3). But she could also connect with elegant ballads, like "Over My Head" (No. 20) and "Little Lies" (which cracked the publication's Top Five in 1987).
