Community Issue: LatinX History / Culture

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

In colonial Spanish Texas it was not the prim and proper society that we often assume. Liz Elizondo (Virginia Military Institute) explained that these Spanish women often challenged the patriarchal order that other parts of America followed.

What does it mean to feel like you belong within a community? Jennifer Bickham Mendez (William & Mary) studied that question within the Latin American immigrant population in Williamsburg, VA. She says Latina immigrant mothers in Williamsburg have forged a sense of belonging by developing support networks and pooling resources to overcome institutional barriers.

Community Issue: Child Care

Program Title and Summary: “For Your Health And Well Being” is a segment on WSGE’s public affairs program Consider This hosted by Regan Brown. Caregiving in America has been exposed during the pandemic. The system proved vulnerable as child care and in-home care options deteriorated when the country was shut down due to COVID19. This left communities with problems and caregiving workers without jobs. Robert Wood Johnson Foundation recently did research into this topic and Vice President Julie Morita shared their findings. She also discussed what we can do to improve the system.

Formed in the mid 1960's, The Soulmasters was an interracial soul band from Danville, VA. Jerry Wilson and John Irby were the two African-American lead singers, and the other 8 members of the band were white. In this piece Jerry reflected on his three years in the band and what it was like touring the South during the height of segregation.

No matter your background or where you're from, we all have that one song that eases our troubles and soothes the soul. Lisa Gilman explored how this ability to escape through music was especially important for American troops during the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

We have a lot to do with what happens to rainwater from the time it hits the ground, to the time we drink it. And our small efforts can add up over time to prevent catastrophe. Kathy Gee (Longwood University) had great advice: don't live downhill from someone else, and start a rain garden. This episode shared that along Appalachian streams, people grew up watching the hellbenders swim around and fight beneath the surface. Now, their grandchildren have hardly ever seen the two-foot long salamanders, affectionately called snot dogs. Bill Hopkins (Virginia Tech) told what's happening to the snot dogs' and how water also has impacted their livelihood.

American railroads of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century were littered with racial, gendered traps - from working in the food car to sitting in first class, Miriam Thaggert (SUNY Buffalo) said that Black women are critical to the history of the American railroad. Her new book is Riding Jane Crow African American Women on the American Railroad. Plus: While many European writers described the open road as a place of freedom, African-Americans revealed a different reality. From periodicals to fiction and nonfiction, Michael Hall (Virginia Commonwealth University) says that travel experiences in black literature -- are raw data about challenges to Black people's mobility in America. His new book is Freedom Beyond Confinement: Travel and Imagination in African-American Cultural History and Letters.
