of 2022

Community Issue: Economic Welfare

Program Title and Summary: “For Your Health And Well Being” is a segment on WSGE’s public affairs program Consider This. Regan Brown is the host. A group of researchers recently released their findings from The Baby’s First Years Study. This project was designed to test “casual connections between family income and early childhood development.” Duke University’s Dr. Lisa Gennetian explained the methodology of the study which she helped plan. She also expanded on the findings of the first year showing that indeed increased income correlates with increased brain activity in babies.

Community Issue: Home Invasion/Break-ins

Program Title and Summary: "Safety Matters" is a segment on WSGE's public affairs program Consider This. Retired Charlotte Mecklenburg Police Detective Ed Williams hosts this segment. In this episode Williams describes how theft is a crime of opportunity, especially during the summer months. Often homeowners will leave their garages and homes open during the warmer weather which can leave them susceptible to thievery. Also, bushes and greenery that is blooming can offer hiding locations for burglars. Williams offers tips on ways to keep your home, car and valuables safe during this time.

Community Issue: Impact of Incarceration

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

When a family is referred to Child Protective Services, they're often treated a lot like criminals on parole and the administrative work required to keep families together can actually make it more difficult to parent successfully. Sociology professor Christa Moore said that our child welfare system should operate more like collaborative care and less like bureaucratic punishment. Plus: How does having a parent who is incarcerated affect young people as they get older? Heidi Williams talked with 18 - 25 year olds whose parents were incarcerated at some point during their childhood. She found that many of them were extra-motivated to succeed and, particularly, to help younger siblings.

Community Issue: Human Rights

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Kirsten Gelsdorf spent over 20 years working for the United Nations and other organizations in the humanitarian sector. She discussed her experience in disaster zones and cleared up some commonly-held misconceptions about humanitarian aid. Also, earlier this year, Virginia became 1 of only 10 states to pass a Bill of Rights for domestic workers. But Jennifer Fish said while it's certainly a step in the right direction, these protections often exist only on paper. She explained how the community can better support workers in the home.

ISSUES & PROGRAMMING SUMMARY

Third Quarter
of 2022

Community Issue: Economy

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Over the last few decades, rural communities have faced economic hardship and population decline. Chris Kukk and Sheri McGuire discussed the SEED Innovation Hub they recently created in Farmville, VA to spark rural entrepreneurship and bring innovative ideas to life. And later: some days at work we're in the zone and super productive. While other days it can be hard to get those creative juices flowing. Alex McKay helped identify 5 days we all experience in the workplace and their impact on creative performance.

ISSUES & PROGRAMMING SUMMARY

Third Quarter
of 2022

Community Issue: Culture

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Bonaventure Balla's favorite word in any language is "cornucopia." And that's saying something, because Balla is a translator who speaks seven languages. He was born in Africa where there are more than 200 native languages. He discussed how many Africans learn several languages in order to communicate adequately. And later, as a composer, Sophia Serghi sees her work as translation. She studied classical music and practiced Beethoven on a regular basis as a young girl. At a friend's house she heard Scorpions, which is Beethoven incorporated with heavy metal music. She became an Iron Maiden fan and decided to begin writing music her way. She also discussed her belief that music is the universal language that can translate our most painful, vulnerable experiences.
