| Noticiero Univision           | 26-Aug     | 10:30 PM         | 3:00            | The most powerful storm to hit Texas in more than 50 years has killed at least one person and is now threatening catastrophic flooding as search and rescue teams deploy to the hardest-hit zones, authorities said on Saturday. Harvey slammed into Texas, the heart of the U.S. oil and gas industry, late Friday as a Category 4 hurricane with winds of 130 miles per hour (209 km per hour), making it the strongest storm to strike the state since 1961.It ripped off roofs, snapped trees, and triggered tornadoes and flash floods, while also curtailing a large portion of America's oil and fuel production and prompting price hikes at the pumps. Harvey has since weakened to a tropical storm, but is expected to lash Texas for days as it lumbers inland, bringing as much as 40 inches (102 cm) of rain and affecting heavily populated areas like Houston. One person died in a house fire in the town of Rockport, 30 miles (48 km) north of the city of Corpus Christi, as Harvey roared ashore overnight, Mayor Charles Wax said in a news conference on Saturday, marking the first confirmed fatality from the storm.  |
| Noticiero Univision           | 31-Aug     | 5:30pm           | 1:56            | Soldiers and police in helicopters and high-water trucks rescued thousands of Texans stranded by floodwater from Hurricane Harvey on Thursday, which has killed dozens of people and displaced more than a million others as it drenches the Gulf Coast. Some 779,000 Texans have been ordered to evacuate their homes and another 980,000 fled voluntarily amid concerns that swollen reservoirs and rivers could bring new flooding, according to Department of Homeland Security acting Secretary Elaine Duke. Harvey roared ashore late Friday as the most powerful hurricane to hit Texas in a half-century. It has since been downgraded to a tropical depression as it heads inland, leaving devastation across the southeast corner of the state. Jessica Richard, 24, said she waited out the storm in her home in Port Arthur, about 85 miles (137 km) east of Houston, until Thursday morning when water on her street rose to waist-depth. She was picked up by a passing truck. "All my family is safe even though there were a few close calls," said Richard, adding that her nephew had been trapped overnight in a flooded apartment with several family members. "He said there were snakes in the water and spiders crawling up the walls. But they got out. "At least 38 people were dead or feared dead in six counties including and around Houston, according to local officials. N the U.S. energy hub of Houston, which was paralyzed by the storm earlier in the week, firefighters conducted a block-by-block search of homes to rescue stranded survivors and recover bodies. |

| Noticiero Univision Edicion Digital | 21-Sep | 11:00 AM | 2:05 | Puerto Rico's energy grid took such a severe blow from deadly Hurricane Maria that restoring power to everyone may take months, the entire island is without power. The impact of the storm on the island territory won't be realized until officials can do a flyover and see what remains. Forecasters say a severe flood threat is continuing across Puerto Rico as Hurricane Maria's outer rain bands pelt the island.  |
| Noticiero Univision                 | 27-Sep | 5:30 PM  | 2:17 | Sen. John McCain urged the Department of Homeland Security on Tuesday to waive a law that would allow foreign ships to send supplies to Puerto Rico after the U.S. territory was ravaged by Hurricane Maria last week. Conditions in Puerto Rico remain dire, and 3.4 million people are virtually without electrical power, while food and drinking water remain scarce. But the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, also known as the Jones Act, requires shipments between U.S. ports be carried out exclusively by vessels built and operated by Americans. That prevents Puerto Rico from receiving shipments from foreign countries like Jamaica, even though it may be cheaper and faster than shipping from the continental U.S. The Trump administration ruled out temporarily setting aside the Jones Act, even though the government had waived those rules in Florida and Texas until last week. After the DHS denied the request of eight U.S. representatives to waive the Jones Act on Monday, McCain stepped in urging the department to reconsider. |

An appeals court unlocked Monday two portions of the Texas SB4 antitrust law, which had been temporarily blocked last month by a federal judge in San Antonio. At a request from the state of Texas, the appeals court in New Orleans decided Monday to allow these two sections of the law to enter into force, which states that Texas officials (including police officers and sheriff's agents) assist immigration officers, and force the prisons to comply with Immigration and Customs Entity (ICE) detainees. Both had been temporarily stopped by federal judge Antonio Garcia in late August in response to a lawsuit filed against Texas filed by several of its cities and counties. That decision, for its part, had been appealed immediately by Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton.

| Noticiero Univision Edicion Digital | 1-Aug  | 11:00 AM | :31  | A state law that allows licensed gun owners to carry concealed handguns in higher education institutions is expanding to community colleges across Texas starting Tuesday. Texas Senate Bill 11, also known as the Campus Carry Law, allows people with a license to carry a concealed handgun on the grounds and in the buildings of colleges and universities. The law went into effect for four-year universities in August 2016 but community colleges were given an extra year to comply. Private colleges and universities can opt out.   |

The witness must be of the opposite sex of the student. We speak to the organization "Children at Risk" who opposes the measure.  |
| Despierta America                   | 15-Sep | 6:00 AM  | :22  | Mixed signals from Washington over a possible agreement to preserve protections for young immigrants are increasing anxiety and confusion on college campuses, where the stakes are high. Amid the uncertainty, colleges and universities are stepping up efforts to protect students enrolled in the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, telling them to be hopeful but plan for the worst. Harvard University has opened a round-the-clock emergency hotline for immigrants in the program. The University of Illinois at Chicago has posted advice on what to do if federal agents show up on campus. UC Berkeley, the University of San Francisco and many other campuses are offering free legal advice to immigrant students now facing fears of deportation. Nearly sixty college and university presidents sent a letter urging congressional leaders to make the program permanent out of "moral imperative and a national necessity." An estimated 350,000 of the country's nearly 800,000 DACA recipients are currently enrolled in school, most at colleges or universities, according to a 46-state survey this year by the advocacy group Center for American Progress. Under the program, they were protected from deportation and allowed to legally work in the United States with two-year permits. |

| Despierta America         | 4-Aug | 6:00 AM  | 1:00 | The Trump administration on Wednesday embraced a proposal to sharply reduce legal immigration, which it said would preserve jobs and lead to higher wages - the same argument advanced by the Kennedy and Johnson administrations half a century ago. But economists say the tomato story and a host of related evidence show that there is no clear connection between less immigration and more jobs for Americans. Rather, the prevailing view among economists is that immigration increases economic growth, improving the lives of the immigrants and the lives of the people who are already here. The Trump administration is proposing sharp reductions in the number of skilled and unskilled workers who are allowed to become permanent residents, halving annual immigration from the current level of roughly one million people a year. |

The nonpartisan number crunchers also estimated that cutting off payments that now reduce copays and deductibles for people of modest incomes would add $194 billion to federal deficits over a decade. That head-scratching outcome is because a different Affordable Care Act subsidy would automatically increase as premiums jump, more than wiping out any savings. |

There have already been more than 500 complaints about price gouging during Hurricane Harvey over the weekend, that includes reports of up to $99 for a case of water, hotels that are tripling or quadrupling their prices and fuel going for $4 to $10 a gallon.  |
| Despierta America | 15-Sep | 6:00 AM  | 2:30 | At a congressional hearing last week, financial industry representatives pushed for legislation that would chip away at consumer protection rules governing the three major credit reporting bureaus. Loosening those regulations "would provide economic stability" by capping the industry's exposure to class-action claims, a trade group official testified. Hours later, one of the three bureaus, Equifax, disclosed a major data breach, which has potentially compromised the sensitive personal data of more than 143 million Americans. Capitol Hill is now demanding answers about the cyberattack. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the Federal Trade Commission, and at least six state attorneys general have opened investigations. While authorities and consumers are calling for action, the push is unlikely to translate into new rules or legal curbs. |

The vehicles are now the subject of an extremely large recall related to their power steering systems, so unless you're a fan of losing control of car as you cruise around town, it's probably a good idea to get that fixed sooner rather than later. The defect, which is present in many 2014 Chevrolet Silverado and 2014 GMC Sierra pickups, can cause the trucks to lose their electric power steering for just a second, but that can be enough to cause some serious headaches when we're talking about a two ton hunk of metal. |
