What is meant by the word "freedom" is at the center of all of the hottest battles happening in our culture right now. Certain words and terms are dead giveaways when it comes to politics and culture. So if someone uses a term like "social justice," "climate change," "free market," "gender equality," "2nd amendment rights," it's usually not hard to guess whether their political allegiances lie to the left or to the right. But there are some words both sides claim as their own. For example, the word freedom. The problem is, quoting something a friend of mine likes to say, it's no good having the same vocabulary if we're using different dictionaries. When it comes to the idea of "freedom," Americans clearly use an array of different definitions. Does forcing Christians to participate in and help celebrate same-sex weddings violate their freedom? Is being able to enlist your doctor's help to kill yourself freedom? What about forcing taxpayers to pay for abortion? Is that freedom?

Christian institutions of higher learning are facing enormous pressure these days to compromise the biblical and historical understanding in areas relating to sex, marriage, and gender. And as I said recently on BreakPoint, the pressure isn't just from outside. If Christian institutions are going to maintain their Christian identity, it will take strong leadership and conviction. Case in point: Azusa Pacific University in California. Last week, the school's administration removed language from its standard of conduct that prohibited LGBT students from having romantic relationships. The change came after months of pressure from activists both outside and inside the university. This move to allow same-sex dating and romance wasn't, according to the university announcement, a compromise on "biblical principles of human sexuality," because the wording of the standard of conduct still technically prohibited sexual activity outside of heterosexual marriage. In other words, yes to same-sex romance, no to same-sex sex. The associate dean of students at Azusa Pacific claimed this change was "still in alignment" with the school's historical Christian identity. Then, on Friday, the university's board of trustees reversed the decision, and issued a statement reaffirming "biblical orthodoxy," in which they clarified that APU's convictions "aren't subject to outside pressure of legal, political, or social varieties." "God's perfect will and design for humankind," the board went on, is "the biblical understanding of the marriage covenant as between one man and one woman. Outside of marriage, He calls His people to abstinence." Importantly, they reaffirmed the school's commitment to walking with students through such challenging questions, and valuing them as individuals, no matter what their stated sexual orientation.

The November elections are less than a month away and Planned Parenthood is making their voice heard here in New York. It does not like Republican/Conservative candidate Mark Molinaro. According to Planned Parenthood, Mark Molinaro is weak on women's health. Why? Because he is a member of the New York State Assembly that reportedly voted for a budget amendment known as the Butler amendment – that would ban taxpayer funding for abortion through Medicaid. Since 2011, Molinaro reportedly donated $2250 from his campaign accounts to Care-net Pregnancy Centers. Donating money to a pregnancy care center exhibits compassion for women who have become pregnant in less than ideal circumstances.

Throughout history there are Christians who chose to run into the brokenness, not away from it. And one just won the Nobel Peace Prize. Nadia Murad is a Yezidi woman who was enslaved by ISIS and repeatedly raped and tortured. After a near-miraculous escape, she made her way to Germany, where she campaigned against what the Nobel Committee called “the use of sexual violence as a weapon of war and armed conflict,” in the Middle East and around the world. The other recipient is Dr. Denis Mukwege, a surgeon from the Congo. In 1999, the French-trained surgeon opened the Panzi Hospital in the country’s most war-torn region. Since its opening, the hospital “has treated more than 85,000 patients with complex gynecological damage and trauma, an estimated 60 percent of injuries has been caused by sexual violence.” Mukwege, who has been dubbed “the man who mends women,” is a ferocious critic of those who perpetrate sexual violence and the governments that stand idly by. In September 2012, in a speech at the United Nations, he criticized the Congolese government and others for failing to stop what he called “an unjust war that has used violence against women and rape as a strategy of war.”

Last month, the pro-abortion National Institute for reproductive health announced the kick-off of the campaign to create a new taxpayer funded abortion access fund in the city of New York. Unfortunately, the New York City public advocate and Democratic Attorney General candidate – supports the campaign. Despite the fact that the state of New York pays for abortion through our tax dollars through Medicaid. They're calling for the NYC Council to commit direct funds to guarantee all New Yorkers – regardless of race, immigration status, or socio-economic standing have access to abortion care.

When sex is divorced from marriage and procreation, bad things happen. Of the many cases that prove this point, here's another. A recent story in the Washington Post described the story of Kianni Arroyo, who is on a three-year quest to meet all of her half-siblings. It's not as idyllic as it sounds... So far she has found forty-four of them. They live in eight states and four different countries. The "father" of these children was, of course, a sperm donor, known affectionately to Kianni as "Donor #2757." The U.S. is one of the most permissive countries when it comes to sperm donations. In fact, the FDA recently rejected an attempt to limit the number of children a donor could father because it claimed to lack jurisdiction. According to the Donor Sibling Registry, less than one-fifth of the parents of its members are married couples. Half are single women and a third are same-sex couples. In other words, the vast majority of donor-conceived children are born to women who either can't or won't provide them with a father whom they can ever hope to know. To put it bluntly, the needs of children have taken a back seat to adult self-fulfillment. It's the most repeated lie of the sexual revolution: "The kids will be fine."

We say it all the time. Ideas have consequences, bad ideas have victims. Just look at the widows of China. Seven years ago, Mrs. Wu's husband threw himself into a dam. He'd recently been diagnosed with liver cancer and could not afford to have it treated. He left behind a wife and two small children—and their story is an example of the terrible, continuing fallout of China's One Child Policy, begun 38 years ago. Mrs. Wu began a pattern of overworking on the family farm. She knew she would likely never remarry: China's One Child Policy meant that she would not be allowed to have children with a second husband, so who would want her? In time, Mrs. Wu's overwork led to health problems. Four years ago, she suffered a stroke, and is now confined to a wheelchair. Like millions of other Chinese widows, Mrs. Wu contemplated suicide. Stories like these caught the attention of my friend Reggie Littlejohn, founder of Women's Rights Without Frontiers. As Reggie explains, "My heart broke when I learned of the incredibly hard lives of the elderly widows in China's remote villages. They have nothing, and no one gives them anything." How does the One Child Policy fit into this? As Reggie put it, the policy "destroyed traditional Chinese family structure." Thirty-eight years ago, when the policy went into effect, China was largely rural. Farmers had large families so they would have help they needed to work the land. Those children, in turn, had many children, which meant that when their grandparents needed to be taken care of, the responsibility was "spread among many children and grandchildren, so that no one felt burdened." Today, thanks to the One Child Policy, one young couple in China can be faced with supporting four parents and eight grandparents—plus their own children. It's not surprising that this can become an intolerable burden. Women's Rights Without Frontiers has just launched a Save a Widow Campaign. They send field workers to the homes of Chinese widows to assess their needs. They're given a monthly stipend so they will have enough to eat—along with hope, and the happy realization that they have not been abandoned.

Many pro-life New Yorkers remember the 2013 trial of the Pennsylvania late-term abortionist – Gosnell – who was found guilty of murdering 3 babies that survived abortions at his clinic. 5 years later a film was produced about this trial... entitled – Gosnell – The Trial of America's Biggest Serial Killer. The film was one of the top 10 films in the U.S. in the opening weekend – despite the fact that it wasn't highly publicized. For more than a decade – New Yorkers for Constitutional Freedoms has helped fight a battle to prevent the passage of abortion expansion legislation that would invite late-term abortionists to set up shop in New York.

What do happy teenagers do? Perhaps the easiest way to answer that question is to ID what they don't do! Jean M. Twenge is a professor of psychology at San Diego State University and has written a 2017 book with a title that's a mouthful and a half: "iGen: Why Today's Super-Connected Kids Are Growing Up Less Rebellious, More Tolerant, Less Happy—and Completely Unprepared for Adulthood." Twenge notes, "Teens are less happy and less satisfied with their lives than they were just 5 years ago. The question is: Why?" First, teenagers' reported happiness dropped between 2011 and 2012. She notes that this is when smartphones became available—perhaps we should call them sad phones! Second, Twenge discovered a correlation between teens' happiness and their participation in activities that involved other people—activities such as sports, going to church or other religious services, volunteer work, and even homework. The more social they were, the happier they were. Virtual reality can give us lots of good things, but it cannot give us the best things. The thing we desperately need as human beings is community and relationship.

On October 21st, the New York Times reported that the Department of Health and Human Services is spear-heading an effort to establish a legal definition of sex under Title 9. Title 9 under the U/S/ Education Amendments of 1972 provides that no person in the U.S. shall on the basis of sex be excluded from participation in... denied the benefits of or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal Financial Assistance. HHS is proposing to define sex – wither male or female – unchangeable and determined by the genitals that a person is born with. Furthermore, any dispute about one's sex would have to be clarified using genetic testing. A legal definition of sex is needed to undo the damage done by the Obama Administration is regard to gender issues in public schools.

Abortion activists like to use the same words we pro-lifers use, but they're using an entirely different dictionary. Case in point: the word "doula." If you've never heard of a doula, traditionally she's a woman who helps mothers through the birth process. Doulas meet their clients months before birth, and get to know them. They assist the mothers through the entire labor and delivery. And when the new mother goes home, many doulas go with her to help with housework and meals for up to six weeks. "Abortion doulas," so-called, will hold a woman's hand, keeping her calm while her baby's life is snuffed out, brushing aside last-minute fears that what she is doing may violate core religious beliefs.

Many people claim to be pro-life but not nearly as many act on their pro-life convictions. Election season is a great time to confront this hard truth. For years, our tax dollars have been flowing into the coffers of Planned Parenthood, to the tune of $500 million a year. Federal law prohibits direct public funding for abortion, only allowing government money to go to contraceptive and counseling services, which Planned Parenthood also offers. But it is our tax dollars keeping these abortion mills alive. Our tax dollars also promote abortion. According to a new report from Live Action, just in this midterm election alone Planned Parenthood has poured about $20 million dollars into the political campaigns of pro-abortion politicians, all of which are, of course, Democrats. Let that sink in: Your tax dollars go to an organization that makes millions more from killing innocents and then gives money back to the one political party committed to expanding their evil business. But let's be clear about the Republicans, too. For the past two years, the GOP controlled the House, the Senate, and the White House. Many campaigned on the promise of defunding Planned Parenthood. Yet, even after video evidence revealing the organization harvests and sells the body parts of aborted babies, half a billion dollars still flows to the nation's largest abortion provider. The latest short-term spending bill was just signed by President Trump in September. I certainly recognize that Republican lawmakers have taken other steps to curb the killing of unborn children, but almost none of it comes from Congress.

Today is election day. On one hand, many Democrats have signaled their eagerness to impeach the president if they gain control of the House. On the other hand, Republicans want to maintain control of at least the Senate to continue their agenda of judicial appointments. Where lawmakers stand on religious liberty, abortion and assisted suicide will have real-life application in this cultural climate. The vote today matters. In fact, 155 statewide ballot measures will be determined today too, dealing with everything from the legalization of marijuana to curtailing the public funding of abortion; from expanding Medicare to non-discrimination ordinances; private property rights, tax issues, school board elections, city and county councils who appoint civil rights commissions, bond referenda and more.

In an age of prenatal medical breakthroughs—and I mean incredible breakthroughs—it's hard to imagine how abortion can still be considered healthcare. Today, the advances in prenatal medicine are simply stunning: in utero diagnostic capabilities and even surgery, quick recovery for moms, amazing neonatal intensive care units. Babies born as early as 23 weeks are routinely saved. Thank God for the incredible lengths to which we can and will rightly go to save and treat children. Thank God for the skilled minds and hands of doctors. But God save us from the ridiculous and deadly inconsistency with which we treat children in the womb. If the mothers of these same children decide they are unwanted, they could be legally killed—both in the U.K. and here in the United States.

Abortion clinics are facing a new challenge, but this time it's not from the pro-life movement. Mail order abortion pills could be a game changer. A few months ago on BreakPoint, I mentioned how the easy availability of the drug misoprostol has rendered anti-abortion laws almost unenforceable in some Latin American countries. Closer to home, if a group called "Women on Web" has its way, the same could happen here in the United States. The American version is called "Aid Access." According to the article's description, "Women take an online screening to see if they are eligible to take misoprostol and mifepristone," which means, among other things, whether or not they are more than seven or eight weeks along in their pregnancy. If they aren't too far along and are approved, "Aid Access" would send an electronic prescription to "an Indian pharmacy she trusts," who would then send the drugs to the woman, along with a tracking number and instructions on how to use the drugs. All this is more proof that even while we work to change the law, including working to overturn Roe v Wade, we should always remember the real goal is, as my friend Scott Klusendorf likes to say, not simply to make abortion illegal, but also unthinkable.

The abortion industry has a public-relations problem. Make no mistake: in this case, it's not the medium, it's the message. But I think the most tone-deaf and openly anti-baby pro-abortion ad ever made showed up on social media earlier this month. The video, which was actually produced a couple of years ago by a left-wing political group called "The Agenda Project," features a cooing baby girl serenaded by a Brahms lullaby, accompanied by the captions: "She deserves to be loved. She deserves to be wanted. She deserves to be a choice." The Agenda Project is a real organization that has influenced national politics in the past with over-the-top ads. Many have mistakenly concluded that the "she deserves to be a choice" ad was sponsored by Planned Parenthood, since it closes with "#StandwithPP." To be clear, Planned Parenthood wasn't involved in the production.

An avenue that effects social change is the culture... Music, art, television, and film. Some of the left most effective work has been cultural. It is now accident that former Vice President Joe Biden announced his support for same-sex marriage in 2012. He stated that the popular sitcom 'Will and grace' had probably done more to educate the American public about homosexuality than almost anything anybody had done so far. Boy Erased is another example of the left's cultural campaign to manipulate viewers to see sexual orientation change efforts as bogus, so they will support the nation-wide push to pass Counselor Conversion Bills.

A test of a worldview is whether it is big enough to weather sickness, disability, and the scorn of a culture. A week ago Monday, my friend Joni Eareckson Tada had surgery to remove a cancerous nodule. This less than three years after being declared cancer-free. I'm thankful to say that the procedure seems to have been a success. Soon after she received this new diagnosis, Joni wrote me about what it means to "suffer well." Still what continually stuns me, and convicts me, is how Joni understands—even now, even after fifty years in a wheelchair and even in the midst of a second battle with cancer—that her suffering is not about her. It has eternal potential. She knows (and she's told me herself) that the way she handles what's happening to her right now will send a message: not only that life with disability is worth living, but that God has a special place in His family for those our culture considers inconvenient. She understands that members of Christ's body who can't walk, or see, or interact on the same level as others are not only indispensable parts of the Kingdom of God, but are needed by the rest of us for our own edification and sanctification.

During and after the 2016 Presidential Campaign, Trump's statements on LGBT issues caused concern for some Christians. In April 2016, Trump criticized North Carolina's common sense bathroom law – asserting that North Carolina should allow people to use the bathroom they feel is appropriate. Says later Trump shifted his opinion making a State's Right argument – in support of allowing North Carolina to set its own gender policies. Last month, the Administration asked the Supreme Court to hear 3 cases involving the President's policy – barring most persons identifying as trans-gender from serving in the U.S. Armed Forces. The Trump Administration has asked the court to expedite the cases.

Homosexuality/Marriage	12/11/18	7:56pm	5 minutes	Breakpoint

Last week during an interview with iHeart radio, Lauren Daigle was asked, given her recent appearance on the Ellen DeGeneres show, whether she believes homosexuality is a sin. "I can't honestly answer that," Daigle replied. "I have too many people that I love, and they are homosexuals." She went on to explain that since she's not God, she can't say one way or another. Instead, people should just "read the Bible and find out" for themselves. For a young woman like Daigle with a skyrocketing career, calling homosexuality a sin in a public forum could mean closing a lot of doors and alienating a lot of fans. There's a real cost that comes with taking a stand for the Christian view of sex and marriage. Deciding to pay that price in a split second with a microphone shoved in your face is something better-trained theologians and pastors have failed to do. The Christian view of sex and marriage should be so clear and our commitment to it should be so well-known by now that there should be no longer any point in asking the question!

Ideas have consequences, and bad ideas have victims. That's certainly true "out there" in the world. But it's just as true "in here" in the church. Last week, the Fort Worth Star Telegram released a series of articles reminiscent of the Pennsylvania grand jury report from earlier this year. You remember—the report that outlined rampant sexual abuse in the Roman Catholic Church. I say "reminiscent" because of the similar details: clergy who used their position to harm the vulnerable, decades of intentional coverup of the crimes by those in authority, reassigning perpetrators to other churches and allowing them to harm more victims, and the emotional manipulation and even shaming of victims to protect the institution. One hundred sixty-eight leaders of independent fundamental Baptist churches, known as the IFBC, have been accused of a litany of crimes, including rape, kidnapping, and sexual assault. The victims included young children and teens, and stories included some of the most prominent IFBC leaders and churches in America. What on earth are we supposed to do with yet another report of even more sexual abuse within the church? Well, I hope that we'll learn.

The Economist recently reported a flood of adolescent girls seeking treatment for gender dysphoria over the last eight years. In 2009, less than half—41 percent—of teens walking through the doors of gender clinics in the U.K. were female. But by 2017, that number jumped to almost 70 percent. Now, if gender dysphoria—feeling yourself to be the opposite gender from your biological sex—were actually something innate to the human condition as trans activists claim, we'd expect these numbers to remain consistent and roughly balanced between boys and girls. But they're not. According to Dr. Lisa Littman, who teaches behavioral and social sciences at Brown University, transgender identity, like Uggs boots, has become a trend. Littman surveyed 256 parents of children who experienced what she terms "rapid-onset gender dysphoria." The results were astonishing: 87 percent of teenagers who suddenly came out as transgender did so after spending a great deal more time than usual online or after "cluster outbreaks" of gender dysphoria among their friends. To put it simply, these kids wanted to transition because "everyone's doing it."

In 2018, Jack Phillips – the Christian Colorado baker who was punished for his unwillingness to make a custom cake for a same sex wedding won his case at The Supreme Court. Unfortunately, the Left is not done trying to punish him for his Christian beliefs. Phillips is suing to try to stop the state from taking action against him over a new discrimination allegation.

The biggest pain point for many parents is—you guessed it—smartphones. Should our kids own them? If so, how do we keep them from owning our kids? A typical family with mom and dad and 2 kids will spend, between monthly contracts, hardware, and apps, around three to four thousand dollars a year on smartphones. And what do they get for this significant financial investment? According to David Eaton of Axis, most parents report feeling utterly defeated by them. We all know the list of risks smartphones bring to our kids: sexual predators, online porn, cyber-bullying – not to mention, as if I need to state the obvious, addiction. Smartphones provide a perpetual distraction, and get in the way of face time – no, not the iPhone app – real face to face time, something every kid needs with their parents. And if most of us parents are honest, we're just as addicted as our kids. The solution is to use the challenge of smartphones to facilitate the mentoring kids need. The team at Axis has identified 100 different conversations that parents can have with their children about smartphones—100!
