6:00am

12:29 minutes of a 59:30 minute program

A new novel from popular children’s author Christine Platt and filmmaker Catherine Wigginton Greene explores the intentional friendship between neighbors of different backgrounds - both upper class stay at home moms, who are both tasked with making a blank friend - fill in either white or black accordingly. The result is a social satire called Rebecca Not Becky. The authors discuss the balance between being color-blind and color-obsessed, whether or not DEI really works, how to take the topic of racial injustice seriously without taking ourselves too seriously, and the joy of interracial friendship.

8:34 minutes of a 59:30 minute program

About 48 million adults experience some degree of hearing loss. Researchers say half of people between 12-35 are at risk of hearing loss due in part to exposure to loud sounds, including music pumped through personal audio devices. Hearing loss is already a problem among older people, with the condition now experienced by one-third of Americans between 64 and 75.

Consistent exposure to loud sounds, and exposure to a single loud sound, can contribute to hearing loss, which if left untreated may increase the risk of health conditions such as dementia.

Helping people maintain or improve their hearing health can help them enhance their overall well-being and reduce their risks of falls and health conditions associated with untreated hearing loss, such as social isolation and depression. That’s why UnitedHealthcare has collaborated with a national nonprofit, Wish of a Lifetime, the charitable affiliate of AARP, to launch a public awareness campaign to let people know how they can protect their hearing.

Dr. Monica Murray, an audiologist with UnitedHealthcare and a nationally recognized hearing health expert, discusses hearing loss and ways we can protect our hearing, especially by trying to prevent noise-induced hearing loss.

Why is pediatric dental care so important? Baby teeth fall out eventually anyway, so why should we bother to teach our kids to take care of those baby teeth? Believe it or not - tooth decay is the most common chronic childhood disease, with over 60% of kindergarteners in San Bernardino County experiencing tooth decay in San Bernardino County! First 5 San Bernardino is partnering with Smile SBC to educate the public on the importance of pediatric oral care. Karen Scott, Executive Director at First 5 San Bernardino, and Bonnie Flippin, Program Coordinator at Smile SBC discuss this importance.

How we consume a massive amount of content via the big screen, your smart TV, your smart phone, streaming services, etc., is constantly in flux. Is it all too much? Is it sustainable? Charles Feldman and Mike Simpson of our sister station KNX / Los Angeles, dives deep into the “State of Entertainment.” What is the future and how does technology, artificial intelligence, and human connection factor in?

Hollywood has always reflected the changing world around it. But we are at a reflection point, coming off a 6 month strike. Streaming services are on the rise and older business models are falling. We discuss what the future of what the entertainment industry looks like and what it means for what we will see and consume.

30 minutes of a 30 minute program

Men and women of the U.S. Military are trained and equipped to fearlessly face the toughest of tasks and battles, but when it comes to one of the toughest battles of all — mental health — they need to know they aren’t alone.

Audacy’s David Glover welcomed American Foundation for Suicide Prevention expert and former Air Force member, Alex Silva in addition to Wounded Warrior Project Clinical Expert, Dr. Erin Fletcher and guest, Dan Miller to discuss the importance of mental health care for Military members and share that the bravest thing many of them can do is ask for help.

Talk Away the Dark: How to Have Open and Honest Conversations with Men. Men are less likely to talk about their mental health struggles than women, which is why it’s so important to break down stigma and open the door for these conversations. Community and friendships are huge protective factors against suicide. We seek to emphasize the critical role that asking someone directly about suicide plays in suicide prevention and demonstrate how to have supportive conversations with loved ones about mental health and suicide prevention.
