Air Date: Sunday, April 1, 2012 @ 7am

2:05      SEGMENT 1: Cholesterol screening for children 12:50
Synopsis: The National Institutes of Health has recommended that all grade school children be screened for high cholesterol to prevent heart attacks later in life. However, some other expert agencies say that screening, presumably with treatment for children with high cholesterol, carries too much risk for a small benefit. Experts and the father of a high-risk toddler discuss the issue.

Host: Reed Pence. Guests: Dr. Samuel S. Gidding, Head, Cardiac Division, Nemours Cardiac Center, A.I. DuPont Hospital for Children, Wilmington, DE, and member, NIH guideline task force; Sean Thompson, father of child with extremely high cholesterol; Dr. Michael Lefevre, Prof. of Family and Community Medicine, Univ. of Missouri-Columbia.
