Issue: Communicating with Autistic Persons

Issue: Joey Watson (IL State Police)/Stephanie Brown (Autism Society of Southern IL)

Synopsis: Communicating with someone who was just in a highly stressful situation like a car accident can be challenging at times. Communicating with someone who has a disorder on the Autism spectrum can be challenging even in non-stressful situations. River Radio, along with a number of partners, arranged to have devices created which allow first responders to communicate with autistic children during particularly stressful situations. These devices are called "pick cards." Joey Watson, a Trooper with the Illinois State Police, and Stephanie Brown, who represents the Autism Society of Southern Illinois, joined Tom Miller to demonstrate how the pick cards can be used to communicate with non-verbal persons.
