On holiday weeks, the Red Cross sees a big decline - over 20% - in blood and platelet donations, meaning the availability of blood products for hospital patients also declines. If you're an eligible blood donor, you can help ensure that blood is ready when needed by making a life-saving appointment to give blood in the next few weeks. Dana Simmons, Regional Communications Manager for the American Red Cross Southern California Region; discusses the need for and process of donating blood.

Founded in 1933 at the urging of Albert Einstein, the non-profit International Rescue Committee was launched to assist those fleeing Nazi Germany. Today, with a presence in over 40 countries worldwide, the organization responds to the world’s worst humanitarian crises, from natural disasters to war. Just within the past year, the flagship San Diego Office, established in 1975, has helped 8,000 refugees, asylees, asylum seekers, secondary immigrants, victims of human trafficking, and low-income individuals to rebuild their lives and thrive in San Diego County. They’re holding their annual “Taste of the IRC” fundraiser, which celebrates the food and culture of refugees and immigrants in San Diego, on October 20th. Donna Durvin, Executive Director of the International Rescue Committee, discusses why it’s important to welcome refugees into the U.S., and what to expect from this event.

Each day, almost 3 million passengers fly in and out of U.S. airports, and most have no idea what goes on behind-the-scenes to get them safely to their final destinations or what decisions are made by air traffic controllers to safely navigate their flights. While most days are usually uneventful, situations do occur that can mean the difference between life and death, and that’s where people like Andy Watson come in. He’s about to release his new book, “The Pilots Guide to Air Traffic Control.” He discusses the most serious in-flight emergencies, the biggest mistake a pilot can make in the cockpit, and why flying is the safest way to travel.

Is climate change killing our economy? Last year, wildfires burned more than three million acres here in California, and we suffered four of our worst wildfires in history from 2017 to 2020, costing \$55 billion in direct property damage, and far more from the health effects from the resulting air pollution, rising insurance costs, lost worker productivity and fire-disrupted supply chains. Bob Keefe, a San Diego resident, Executive Director of E2, Environmental Entrepreneurs, and author of Climatenomics, says that climate change is an economic issue, but that that just might save the planet!

With vacations underway and kids off from school – parents need to keep in mind the problem of Summer Slide - - which is learning loss over the months not attending school. This loss is one of the most common causes of the achievement gap, or the differences in scores between students. The average student loses 17% to 28% of school-year gains in English language arts during the summer and in math the average loss was around 25-30%, according to the American Education Research Association.

Not only that, research has found that summer slide can sometimes place students as much as three months behind their peers then they return to school in the fall and some are less likely graduate high school or have a higher-paying job later in life. That’s why parents should be aware of this potential problem and help their kids take steps needed to prevent learning loss.

One of the easiest solutions is to help keep kids reading during the summer. It’s been shown that the amount of time a child spends reading is directly connected to preventing summer learning loss and promoting long-term success. Sally Ann Zoll, the CEO of United Through Reading, a nonprofit organization that works to put books in the hands of children of service members, discusses this potential problem and offer solutions.

The Marine Corps Educators' Workshop provides educators from priority colleges and universities an opportunity to learn how Marine officers are recruited, trained and developed into leaders from a pool of highly qualified college students. The program is designed to demystify recruit and officer candidate training, foster stronger relationships among recruiting personnel and the communities they serve, and increase advocacy among influencers who help shape decisions of young men and women. Meghann Young, a teacher at Oceanside High School, who participated in one of these workshops, discusses her experiences.

Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego will open its doors to the local community on Saturday, October 22nd, for the 20th year of their annual Boot Camp Challenge 5k. It is a 3-mile obstacle race where runners can experience some of the mystiques of Marine Corps Boot Camp and negotiate the some of the same obstacles used in Recruit Training. What makes this event most unique are the 60 plus Drill Instructors who are there to “encourage” participants throughout the course. Staff Sergeant Redfield, one of the Drill Instructors at MCRD, discusses how to train for this event, what to expect, and why the Marine Corps is looking forward to this opportunity to connect with the community.

The California School Boards Association (CSBA) is launching an initiative to create a better understanding of the work school boards perform, humanize school trustees and illustrate the steps they’ve taken to support students during the pandemic. The campaign shows how school trustees have transformed the disruption caused by COVID-19 into an opportunity to strengthen schools, expand services and enhance opportunities. Through video storytelling, Q&As, feature articles, blog posts, interviews and advertising, trustees will share their personal perspectives on school district governance and what called them to public service. Susan Heredia, President of the California School Boards Association, discusses the challenges schools have faced over the past couple of years.

Twenty one years ago, four commercial airlines were hijacked mid-flight. Two of them were flown into the North and South Towers of the World Trade Center, one was flown into the west side of the Pentagon, and the fourth crashed into a field near Shanksville, Pennsylvania, after a struggle between the passengers and hijackers. For those of us who were alive twenty one years ago, it was comparable to the JFK assassination, or the attack on Pearl Harbor – everyone remembers exactly where they were when they heard the news.

Flight attendant Katie Donatelli, who was working as a flight attendant twenty one years ago today - and who was on a plane that flew out of Boston and was scheduled to go to Los Angeles - and but for the grace of god was not on one of those ill-fated flights, discusses her experiences that day, and what she hopes future generation will understand about how this event changed the U.S.A.
