Crime	Channel 11 News on FOX53	1/23/24	10PM	2:24	A new pilot program aims to take on nuisance crimes. The police are working with the court system hoping to address repeat offenders and get people suffering from homelessness and addiction the help they need. Carrick, Magisterial Judge Richard King has seen his share of people suffering from homelessness, mental illness, and drug addiction. He also serves as President of the Allegheny County Special Court Judges Association. He's found that sometimes it's those people who are repeat offenders of nonviolent crimes, like criminal mischief or public drunkenness. There's also a lot of other people that for whatever reason they're out there and they get on a bad cycle, and they just can't seem to get out of it. With a new effort called the Downtown Court Project, inside of Pittsburgh Municipal Court, twice a month, one judge will preside over summary and minor misdemeanor crimes that happen in the Central Business District. With one judge hearing these sessions, they become familiar with repeat offenders. What can happen with the same judge is that will be available and, in their memory, and say we were just here 2 weeks ago and part of your deal with we continued the case was not being involved in anymore crime, go to rehab and here you are back again doing almost the exact same thing. And they'll have professionals who can help with some of the root issues.

It involves state police, county police and Pittsburgh public safety. State Attorney General Michele Henry stood with Allegheny County District Attorney Stephen Zappala on the steps of the courthouse. Behind them were several leaders in our local law enforcement community who will be playing a role in the new Allegheny County Gun Task Force. Their goal is to stop the illegal selling and trafficking of illegal guns and stop gun violence in Allegheny County. One of their biggest challenges is stopping straw purchases which is when someone buys a gun for another person who isn't allowed to have one, like a felon or a teenager.
Crime	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/14/24	10PM	2:33	Communities across the country continue to be rocked by gun violence including Pittsburgh and the lieutenant governor is looking to make big investments in tackling this public health crisis. The sound of gunshots has become part of daily life for many Pennsylvanians. Barbie Sampson lost her 24-year-old daughter jasmine in 2021 to gun violence joining thousands of other families in our state impacted by this epidemic. so how can the state help to combat this trend so other mothers don't feel this pain? The governor, in his budget address, proposed opening an office of gun violence only the second state to do so. The state is looking to invest one hundred million more dollars. Lt. Governor Austin Davis says the plan includes tracking the money and progress to keep Pennsylvania's numbers trending down. But Sampson fears this plan misses the element of policing she believes is needed that there isn't enough money to prevent gun violence or officers in the communities to do patrolling.
Crime	Channel 11 News on FOX53	3/6/24	10PM	1:58	A State department official explains how to stay safe in some international tourist spots. Health	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/5/24	10PM	3:18	The popularity of Ozempic and Wegovy has skyrocketed over the past few years. Doctors have written more than 9 million prescriptions for the drugs for type 2 diabetes and weight loss. But as the number of users jumped, so have the number of calls to poison control centers. Emily Czapko has battled obesity her entire life. Thyroid disease wrecked her metabolism. This avid runner couldn't do anything to lose weight. Last year her doctor prescribed Ozempic and she has lost 80 pounds since July. But not everyone's experience has been good. After struggling with fertility issues, Kayce Zangaro's doctor recommended she slim down to increase her chances of becoming pregnant. After just one month on Ozempic, Kayce dropped 40 pounds, but on New Year's Day, she woke up feeling horrible and couldn't keep anything down including medications, water or even Pedialyte. Kayce's family rushed her to the emergency room for IV fluids. Then two weeks ago, it started again including constant vomiting due to raising the Ozempic dosage. At the Pittsburgh poison center at UPMC, calls from people on Ozempic and Wegovy have increased steadily. Starting in 2022, dispatchers took 30 calls from people having serious side effects and in 2023 saw an increase to about 50 cases. Joshua Shulman is the medical director of the poison center. He says it's hard to say why the center is seeing more Ozempic and Wegovy calls with complaints about severe nausea, uncontrollable vomiting, and abdominal pain. Dr. Shulman says Ozempic and Wegovy could be confusing to dose. It's designed to be taken just once a week, and some patients may take it too early by mistake. Most of the medication comes in a pen that allows patients to click a dial to administer the correct dose, but some doses the patients have to pull it up themselves in the syringe. That's the potential for error. For Emily Czapko, the path to better health hasn't been completely smooth. She's had many bouts of nausea. She cautions people that these aren't miracle drugs. You must exercise, watch your diet and make sure you take the medication exactly as prescribed.
Health	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/13/24	10PM	2:26	When you look at the state numbers an estimated 98 thousand Pennsylvanians ages 12 to 17 have depression and more than half didn't have therapy or mental health care. But one lawmaker is looking to bring that care right to those kids inside schools just like this one. One state representative wants to take it a step further. He's proposing a pilot program that would allow public school districts to screen students 6th through 12th grade for mental health annually. Representative Michael Schlossberg/PA 132nd District says, "We want to create parameters in which this legislation has to operate, but from there we want to make sure schools have the ability to operate it on what best fits their needs." The program would be run under the department of education...but the information about each student goes no further than the school. Parents also would have the option to opt out. Now as the bill is written, it would provide ten million dollars to be distributed to all schools participating to help fill the gaps with resources. Representative Schlossberg has the support from school districts and hopes to introduce the draft of his bill in the next week to be able to bring it up for discussion when the house returns to Harrisburg this March.
Health	Channel 11 News on FOX53	3/8/24	10PM	:39	You may use melatonin to help you sleep but new research shows why it's important to make sure it's out of reach from kids. According to the CDC, between 2019 and 2022, nearly 11,000 children went to the emergency room after taking melatonin. Nearly half of those visits involved pills that looked like gummies or candies. Doctors say too much melatonin comes with side effects, like headaches and drowsiness. The National Institute of Health says melatonin is generally safe to give your kids when used as directed. They advise to check with your pediatrician first.
Safety	Channel 11 News on FOX53	1/9/24	10PM	2:26	Tucked into the beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains, down in a basement, some 43,000 boxes hold a unique slice of our history. It is the first weather observation taken at the south pole and the date is January 1957. The archives at the National Centers for Environmental information help us understand how weather and climate shape our world. From the cool afternoon Rosa Parks sat in protest to the rainy morning before the assassination of JFK. What if this cold front had shifted to the afternoon? How would that day have gone differently? How would the course of American history have been changed if the weather were a little bit different? Jason Cooper oversees one of the world's largest collections of weather and climate data, which includes some famous names. Washington, Jefferson, and Ben Franklin were notorious weather observers. But here's a good example of what we have from the 1800s. Detailed notes on temperature, rain, and wind even hand-drawn weather maps from 1873. This is what we would consider the authoritative source. This is the information we've collected as a country and as a globe over the last 2-3 centuries that supports the predictions and decisions and analyses that. So, when you hear NOAA scientists say 2023 was the hottest year ever recorded, it's not just a guess. It's largely because of those meticulous records from teachers, soldiers, and farmers. Karin Gleason is a NOAA NCEI meteorologist and says we're looking at data. We're not looking at politics, it's about trying to make a connection between what we're seeing and why it really matters or why it should matter. Karin Gleason's team uses those records to analyze and rank today's record-breaking extremes.

It has now been nearly a year since a Norfolk Southern train derailed in a fiery crash so close to the Pennsylvania state line. The site where the charred rail cars still smoking came to a crumpled resting point looks completely different today nearly 1 year later. 42.8 million gallons of water have been recovered and removed, 176,000+ tons of waste soil have been removed, 5,200 feet of waterways have been flushed, Norfolk Southern says all their work is monitored by the U.S. EPA and Ohio EPA. Norfolk Southern says the air, water and soil are all safe. That's what independent data from federal agencies. There is still a lot of work to be done until Norfolk Southern can pack up.
Safety	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/4/24	10PM	3:14	The FBI says there are more than 500,000 online predators lurking on social media trying to connect with kids mostly 15 and under. A local researcher is now sounding the alarm after discovering websites in place to groom kids. And they found the protections that were supposed to be in place weren't working. It's a place where kids connect with friends but even while they're under your roof they could be in danger. Lara Putnam is a Pitt professor. She studies the flow of digital information for Pitt's disinformation lab. The mother of four never imagined what she'd find while searching neighborhood political groups. "I was looking for Facebook groups linked to Pittsburgh's 11th, 12th and 13th ward but what I found was a whole series of Facebook groups that were surfaced by the algorithm that have the titles in Spanish. Buscando novi de 11, 12,13 anos, which means I'm looking for a girlfriend who's 11, 12 or 13 years old. I was shocked and appalled. I instantly used Facebook's online reporting tools to report these and within 24 hours got back the answer. No problem has been discovered with this group. To make matters worse, the algorithm began to go into overdrive recommending similar groups and pages from around the world for Putnam to like and follow. Many were sexually explicit. Children were asked to submit pictures of themselves. To judge pictures of male genitalia. This was all going on in an openly public Facebook group. It had tens of thousands of members. After months of unsuccessfully trying to get the social media sites completely taken down, she did notice fewer explicit sites online. "This is a public health emergency. How did these groups exist and there's no action being taken?" There are half a dozen bills in front of congress aimed at requiring social media companies to do more to protect kids. So far none of those proposals have moved forward. And the Senate judiciary committee recently grilled social media companies about their plans to keep kids safe.

Safety	Channel 11 News on FOX53	3/13/24	10PM	2:30	Local leaders are looking to stop shootings before they happen. They're calling it a public health approach to public safety. Lee Davis plays a crucial role in violence prevention in the Woodland Hills communities. He sits on a shooting review panel that meets monthly to dissect each incident. It's part of a community gun violence reduction plan with the county's department of human services. These communities from Sto-Rox to the Mon valley were identified as the most gun riddled. Each has a shooting review panel. The county has made a five-year commitment with 50 million dollars. One year in and those on the ground believe it's working. A centralized approach with the community groups in those target areas following up.
Economy	Channel 11 News on FOX53	1/3/24	10PM	1:53	A debt of nearly $200,000 is being canceled over a year after the abrupt closure of Pittsburgh Career Institute. When 24-year-old Emily Wolfgang started the vet tech program at Pittsburgh Career Institute, she couldn't be more excited. But after PCI's accreditation was pulled it abruptly announced it was shutting down at the end of November in 2022 with less than two weeks' notice. Emily was just 1 class away from graduating. Adding to the frustration she had to pay out of pocket for her license exam and externship, expenses that she says should have been paid for through the school. Its sudden closure left many students with outstanding balances of about $218,000 worth of debt. But thanks to an agreement between the state attorney general's office and PCI, those students will be off the hook for any money they might owe. Although the end of her college experience left a bad taste in her mouth Emily says she's just grateful to be working in the field she loves.

Educaation	Channel 11 News on FOX53	1/2/24	10PM	:45	The department of education has debuted a new version of the free application for federal student aid or, the FAFSA, online. The new FAFSA has significantly reduced the number of questions. The form will connect with the i-r-s to allow applicants to pull their parents' most recent tax filings. Second, applicants can now skip questions that just aren't relevant to them. And the way aid is calculated is changing, likely boosting the number of students eligible for Pell grants. Colleges will begin to receive applicant data late this month. The FAFSA revamp was approved by congress in 2020 after criticism that the previous process was too complicated.
Educaation	Channel 11 News on FOX53	1/8/24	10PM	2:22	In about 2 weeks a new semester will begin for students and faculty at Pittsburgh Technical College, but there are questions about the financial standing of the Oakdale school and its future. The school may be running out of money. Audited financial statements from Pittsburgh Technical College make it very clear there is substantial doubt about the college's ability to continue. These audited financial statements ending in June of 2023 show PTC is losing a lot of revenue and the college violated the general standards of financial responsibility. The technical college is down 42% of its revenue from tuition, fees, and housing since 2020. Financial statements show the college lost 8 million dollars in the year ending in June of 2023 and according to the report PTC earned a composite score of 0 out of 3. The auditor's report says PTC entered into an agreement on September 14, 2023, to temporarily pause paying its loans and as part of the agreement, the College is required to consult in good faith with advisors of the bond holders to consider any merger acquisition or sale of substantially all the College's assets. The department of education says PTC failed to report the default and forbearance agreement to them in a timely manner. PTC's accretor says the college also failed to meet a November 15 deadline to submit a supplemental report to them. The accretor moved the deadline to this past Friday. PTC says all information has been provided and that extension was not needed. The technical college says they remain fully accredited and have no plans to close adding: "Similar to other higher education institutions, PTC is facing declining enrollment and higher costs. Therefore, the College is exploring a variety of different scenarios, including mergers, acquisitions, partnerships, and other creative thinking to ensure financial stability for the future." As for that composite score of 0 PTC says they have not received an official score from the department of education. PTC is in talks with Penn College of Technology which is affiliated with Penn State and that a special board meeting is scheduled for next week.
Educaation	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/1/24	10PM	:36	Kids are starting to make up for a covid-related loss of learning, but experts worry the impacts could be lasting. A study of 3rd through 8th graders in 30 states found that while students are improving - scores are still far behind pre-pandemic levels. In math, which took the hardest hit students have made up about a third of that regression. And 25% in reading. It suggests we're on our way to a full recovery. We're certainly not there yet. But I think we've made up a lot more ground in one year than many people would have predicted. The numbers also show the education gap between wealthy and low-income districts only widened with the pandemic.

Educaation	Channel 11 News on FOX53	2/14/24	10PM	1:48	The standardized test for admission college entrance exam is going completely digital. Almost two million high school students took the test in 2023, according to the college board. However, for the first time the college entrance exam is going fully digital. The online test is about 45 minutes shorter than the older versions. Also, the questions change in difficulty, depending on the student's performance. So, if a student does well on the first section the test will generate tougher questions. One thing that's stayed the same, exams will still take place at official testing locations, with a proctor. But students will need to download the blue book app onto their laptop or tablet ahead of time. These changes come as several schools recently announced they will again require the standardized test for admission. Dartmouth released data showing these scores are an important indicator of a student's success. If you are a high school student taking the SAT, it's important to note the deadline to register for the march exam is next week.
