GED CONNECTION
"Number Sense"
This program addresses the importance of numbers and having a sense for them in order to make good decisions in life as well as on the GED test. A host and several guests underscore the importance of using numbers in their daily lives. Video also depicts exchanges between car buyer and dealer over price, and traveler trying to understand directions in foreign country. Numbers are important because they are uniformly standard everywhere. They are also linear and infinite, which allows for easy comparison to see if one number is more than, less than, or the same as another. Learning math, like any new process, involves understanding specific terminology. Understanding symbols is more important than arithmetical ability. Getting a feel for numbers is necessary in order to restate a mathematical value or problem. Estimating is an important ability that can aid people in purchasing and other decisions.

EDUCATION NEWS PARENTS CAN USE

"Early Childhood Development: What Parents Need To"

Even before a baby enters the world, parents eagerly await the tremendous joy, pride and hope that child will bring them. Naturally, parents want to give their children the love and emotional security and appropriate nutrition and health care that help lay the building blocks for a healthy, successful life.

And, one of the most important things parents and caregivers can give our youngest children is an environment rich in language. Research clearly demonstrates that a child's success in school and later life is tied to his or her ability to read. The years from birth through age five are a time of extraordinary growth and change. As early as six-weeks-old, babies like the feeling of closeness when a parent, grandparent, or other caretaker reads to them. Babies begin to learn about spoken language when they hear their family members talking, laughing, and singing, and when they respond to all of the sounds that fill their world. It is in these years that children develop the basic knowledge, understandings, and interests they need to reach the goal of being successful learners, readers, and writers. They begin to understand written language when they hear adults read stories to them and see adults reading newspapers, magazines, and books for themselves. However, children do not automatically learn the skills they need to begin reading - they need help and practice. Not having those opportunities can have devastating effects on a child's success in school. Based on the understanding that literacy is a learned skill, not a biological awakening, young children need learning environments rich in sounds and spoken language with lots of opportunities to learn about books, letters, print, numbers and counting. Through activities such as these children understand that learning is both enjoyable and important. They prepare them to be successful in school-and in life.

That is why, with the "Early Reading First," and "Reading First" initiatives, the U.S.

Department of Education is working to provide all children with an equal chance for academic success. The April edition of Education News will explore questions such as: What does the medical community tell us about the latest research on brain development and its ties to early learning? What do effective preschool and early literacy programs look like? Early literacy

begins the day the child is born. What activities can parents do - in and out of the home - to help lay the important foundation for reading? How can early childhood programs meet the needs of all students despite drastic preparation levels? In what ways does poverty affect a child's acquisition of pre-reading skills? What resources are available for early childhood teachers, parents, grandparents, and childcare providers on ways to prepare children to be successful in school? What types of professional development should early childhood professionals to ensure students are prepared for elementary school?

"Science Education: Preparing Students for the Glob"

For some time, business leaders have sounded the alarm that our schools are failing to provide the kind of rigorous education in science needed to produce graduates ready to meet the demand of the 21st century marketplace. Of the 20 fastest-growing occupations projected for this decade, 15 of them require substantial science or math preparation. The phenomenon of American business leaders looking to other countries for workers with high-level science and math skills has moved from a developing trend to a common practice. With the advent of the information age, virtually all jobs-not just those in scientific fields-are demanding a deeper understanding of science than was necessary in previous generations. The challenge of the 21st century will be to ensure that all students develop an appreciation for and mastery of science subjects. To help address this need and encourage the preparation of U.S. students as science, technology and engineering professionals, the president is calling for a renewed focus on improving science instruction. In addition, in the year 2007, statewide assessments of students in science will be required under the No Child Left Behind Act. Further, data indicates that we will need over 2 million new teachers in this decade, including 240,000 specifically prepared to teach math and science. With states reporting alarming shortages in the number of math and science teachers meeting the "highly qualified" provisions under No Child Left Behind, America faces a time of challenge, yet opportunity, in its quest to remain the leader of the world economy in the next generation and beyond.

CYBERCHASE

"Totally Rad"

The dastardly Hacker (Christopher Lloyd) takes over the Radopolis cybersite, declaring himself King in "Totally Rad," the season premiere of CYBERCHASE.
In an effort to dethrone him, the kids challenge the Hacker's extreme team to a winner-take-all skate-off. There's just one catch: high-scoring tricks need

as much area as possible and the field keeps mysteriously changing!
With
Digit (Gilbert Gottfried) as coach, the kids put on a dazzling display
blading, boarding, and biking, but can they match their performance to the changing arena? The Big Idea: Different shapes bounded by the same perimeter
can enclose very different areas. Math Topic: Perimeter/Area.

CYBERCHASE

"Mother's Day"

Special Holiday Episode!" It's Mother's Day in cyberspace - and Hacker is determined to ruin it for everyone, especially Motherboard, by derailing the train that picks up the rare and colorful Madre Bonitas. This beautiful flower symbolizes Mother's Day, and it must be harvested on this one day only.
It's a race against time, as the kids and Digit try to repair the breaks in the line and save Mother's Day. The Big Idea: Use a decimal point to join tenths with

whole numbers and you have a decimal system you can use to easily record, compare and combine whole numbers with fractions. Math Topic: Decimals; NCTM

Links: Number and Operations.
