Doors: 6 PM / Show Time: 7 PM After 10 albums,	House of Blues 15 Lansdowne Street Boston, MA

	multiple hit singles, millions of records sold, a GRAMMY Award and 20 years of touring, in late 2017, SWITCHFOOT put the brakes on. The successful release and tour for their most recent album, WHERE THE LIGHT SHINES THROUGH had concluded, and the San Diego-based quintet decided to take a long deserved, much needed hiatus. Their goals? To think on difficult, important questions about the band and themselves personally, including: "Why are we doing this?" The answers weren't long in coming and are musically evident in the 14 remarkable songs that make up NATIVE TONGUE, a creative juggernaut spawned by singer Jon Foreman's realization that the answer to "why?" was to "pursue joy." Joy became the paramount goal in his life and music. "Joy is an incredible motivator," says Jon: "It's only to be found in the moment, not in the past or future. That's what music is to us: The ever-present joy of the ever-present now." During the hiatus, Jon's positive immediacy inspired songs that he had to get out. Creative openness without a goal resulted in an electric, wide-ranging collection. "There was no 'should' or 'ought.' It was a beautiful freedom. Songs we wrote didn't have to turn into anything, as long as we were pursuing joy. That's where this record was born." The results of that pursuit include the infectious, title track; the get-your-lighters out, sway-along "ALL I NEED"; and the edgy excellence of "VOICES." Then there's a trippily wonderful departure in the Beatles-esque "DIG NEW STREAMS," a tune drummer Chad Butler calls an "odyssey. It breaks so many rules: Structure, tempo, arrangement, style. I love that."
