Program description: For many civilians, the realities of war are just images on the local news from far-off lands in upheaval. Most only hear about war from talking heads, not from those who lived it. In The Telling Project, a performance piece organized by playwright Jonathan Wei, veterans are given a voice to share their experiences. The goal of the play is to connect veterans and their stories in an intimate setting with civilians who may not fully understand the military experience and the struggles many face. Veterans are trained to perform their own monologues. The show was originally performed on stage in October 2014 at the Alvarez Family Studio Theater in the new Tobin Center for the Performing Arts.
